BY ALPHRUS.
A WANDERER'S LIFE.

There are incidents in this world's history bearing the impress of probability, that are more thrilling and interesting than many of the most elaborately wrought fictions. We will not vouch for the authenticity of our story; but, admitting that it at least comes within the range of probability, we give it for the pleasure of those who may wish to while away an idle moment.

Many years ago, when there was such a rush for California, in consequence of the exciting news that mines of golden wealth had been discovered in the mountains and valleys of this Pacific state, a young man left his native home in Monmouth, not far from M—, and joined the motley crowd that hastened to the land of gold. He was young, thoughtless, happy and ambitious. No cares had bowed his brow with wrinkles or taken the freshness of youth from his cheeks. Labor had not destroyed any of the buoyancy of his spirits, nor had disease broken down his athletic form. He left, at his departure, one of the happiest of homes, his warm friends and many dear associates, not thinking he was saying farewell for the last time to so many who were then cheerful and busy about him. His last adieu was reserved for one with whom every anticipation of happiness and success was connected—one whose attachment to him was of a nature warmer than even a sister's affection. But this adieu was said, and he departed.

For years he toiled in the valley of the Sacramento and along the rugged steeps of the Sierra Nevada, laboring among men whose courses were so vile as to frighten even demons, and living among drunkenness, riot and murder, that almost rivaled even perdition itself, engaged in the all-absorbing pursuit of money. The highest peaks of the mountains were explored by him, and the lowest valleys felt the stroke of his pick and spade. Rapine and murder held their frantic orgies in vain, for the fidelity with which he pursued and worshipped the one deity, gold, made him dare all dangers and perils; quiet rivers, rippling streams and rural scenery, waned their charms, for if his path led by them, his mind was a whirlwind, making all nature war her roughest garb; the sun rose in all its magnificent grandeur above the hill-tops, but it served only as a sign for him to be up and off on his search for gold. He saw no happiness in the present, but looked in the distance, and feasted on the hear when he should drink the cup of pleasure, in his palace of wealth and luxury. Where streams went babbling to the rushes on their banks and made sweet music in the balmy summer air, there he sought the loaves that was to line his purse with wealth. At length the idol that he worshipped, began to lavish its favors upon him with an open hand, and one and another claim of his discovering, emptied their golden treasures into his lap. Men who had lost their little all in fruitless search, and had not the means to return to their far-distant homes, were hired by him at paltry prices, and though poverty pressed them hard, he ground them to the very earth, for his gains must be increased. He was a hard master, but he served his master, Mammon, faithfully, hoarding, saving and multiplying.

Success attended him; his efforts were abundantly profitable, and wherever he advanced, he was welcomed by his idol. True, he often feared that the man over whom he thus acted the tyrant, would cry out for retributive justice and plunge the assassin's knife to his heart, but the god had so completely taken possession of him that in the face of even such danger, he pursued the one object with the same persecuting zeal, leaving the future to the accomplishment of his own dark deeds.

At length he became tired of this round of toil. He had drudged, worked and accumulated, until he had become rich, and the wealth of the earth had been upturned to him from her bowels, as with a magic spell; his treasures had been surrendered to his voracious necessities, and all tangible substances seemed but to come in contact with him to be transmuted into gold.

And now the vision of happiness loomed up before him. He could not find it here, for all around him were those who were bowing to the same god that he had worshipped as a zealot. Thoughts of his native land, and memories of home, rushed in upon his mind. As he looked up and saw the sun tingling with its glory, the now snow capped summits of the Sierra, he remembered how often he had stood upon the old porch of his own home, and watched it as it rose behind the lovely Highlands, in the red sea of a winter's sky. Home! ah, how long it had been since he had heard from home!—Mother, father, sister, where are they? Where, too, is she to whom he had said the last farewell? All had been, for the time, forgotten in the search for gold; but now that memory begins to play about his soul, and sings to him the song of—"The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket, that hung in the well,"
he hurries to return to his childhood's happy hearth-stone.

Upon the passage he had full time for reflection, and memory was indeed busy. The home of his infancy—years had passed away since he had received tidings from the family mansion. The friends whose confidence he enjoyed at his departure—their very forms and parting looks were retained, but the time which had elapsed rendered it probable that the wanderer, who left in his youth, and had left them for years with no advice of his existence, had passed from their memories. But now that he had given up his only occupation, the memory of his early years was doubly strong, and he was pained with fancying the surprise he should create among his old associates, by a sudden return. In reviewing his early life, however, there was one remembrance that smote upon his conscience; there was one form and one face, of which, surely he he drew it upon the tablet of an almost insensible heart, he dared not imagine the present condition. Full plainly could he see again the tears which added crystals to the eye without dimming its lustre; full well could he see the bosom swelling with a language to which the tongue can give no utterance, and which is to be read only by the eye of affection; full well could he see the smile which mantled on that face, as Hope gave her aid to smother their troubled feelings, and was successful. Much as he loved to gaze inward, (for within him was the only portrait he now possessed,) he could not do it without pain. He had the living substance in his heart, but it was in such a frame and case of encasement that he could not behold the pleasant picture for any length of time, without feeling the bright feet overshadowed with care and sorrow, or the fall and heinous form fallen away. He left his home to provide the means for their happiness; he had provided the means, but when there was sufficient, he had forgotten the object; and now that there was a superfluity, it might be impossible to carry the original intention into effect. The latter thought was torture, but the torture was of his own invention. He had wooed the chain of roses which first bound him; he had voluntarily severed its links for the purpose of reuniting them more firmly; and the thought that he had not fulfilled his promise was maddening. Ten thousand apprehensions followed it, but nothing brought a balm for this wound. He could only promise himself that, if possible, all should be amended; but that was a point upon which too much depended. It was to his heart more troublesome than the storms that raged upon the ocean never which he was then sailing; for with their horrors, they brought a natural and physical grandeur, while his horrors of suspense were accompanied only by the remembrance of his own folly and weakness.

Concluded next month.

A new series of postage stamps has been decided upon, and will soon be issued by the Post Office Department. The new stamps will be one-third larger than the present stamps, and consist entirely of profile heads.

Franklin Pierce was the fourteenth President of the United States. There are fourteen letters in his name, and the first letters of the Christian and surname being P and P, stand for fourteenth President.

A correspondent of the American Churchman, was writing from San Francisco, says:—
"Praising God by proxy is done at a good round price. The quartettes in three of our own churches cost about $10,000, or in each, at the rate of being $30 to $75 a Sunday.

JOURNAL AND ADVERTISER.

MATAWAN, N. J., JANUARY, 1870.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Senator Little told us, at the Primary meeting of the Herbert House, last Fall, that it was his ambition to aid in the completion of a railroad from Long Branch to New York, via Matawan. The people are on the qui vive, to see how much ambition our esteemed Senator has in this direction.

Mr. John Parker is putting up a small residence on Center Street, for Mr. Tunis Hagen.

The Mutual Building & Loan Association of Matawan closed its third and commenced its fourth year, on the second Monday evening of this month. The amount of money loaned by the Association, since its organization, is a little over $50,000, and each share is now worth $49.56.

Officers elected for the present year:— President, Wm. Spader, C. H. Wardell, C. W. Fountain, D. H. Wyckoff, C. T. Bailey, T. Hubbard, Wm. Maggs.

Directors, Benson Brown, D. H. Strong, Luke Brannin.

The Directors elected officers from their number as follows:— President, Wm. Spader; Treasurer, C. H. Wardell; Secretary, C. W. Fountain.

G. A. W. will please accept our thanks for Washington papers.

The Methodist and Baptist donations, which took place last week, and the week previous, were very successful, and Rev. Mr. Relys, of the former, and Rev. Mr. Slater, of the latter church, desire to make their acknowledgments for the liberality of their friends. The M. B. donation amounted to about $250, and the Baptist, to about $350.

Mr. G. D. White has been making a partition lengthwise through the center of his mammoth Stone Emporium, and we understand that arrangements have been made by D. H. Wyckoff & Son for leasing the half next to Brannin & Co's Carriage Factory, for a term of years. They intend to remove their Agricultural Warehouses to this place and add very largely to their stock, besides introducing another branch to their business.

Professors Williams & Harriott gave a free exhibition of trained dogs in Washington Hall, on the evening of the 11th inst, exhibiting some performances that were very interesting, showing to what extent the dog may be trained. A lecture was also given on the science of horsemanship, by Prof. Williams, and on the following morning he brought out his famous horse, American Hunter, and turning him loose in front of the Herbert House, made him perform some very interesting feats.

Mr. Joseph Maggs has had several men at work, grading and otherwise improving the point opposite to Mr. Fielder's, on the road leading to Cliffwood, and has made it a desirable and attractive place as a site for a residence. He intends to enclose it with a neat fence, and plant a vineyard there for the present.

James L. Terhune, for a number of years employed in our Bank, has accepted the offer of a clerkship with the Freehold National Banking Co, made vacant by the election of Mr. Stewart Brown as Cashier. We are sorry to lose the association of our young friend from the literary and social circles of Matawan, but take pleasure in recommending him to the society of Freehold as a hearty good fellow. Query:— Are the rabbits and birds mourning the departure of J. L. T.?

At a regular meeting of Matawan Division, No. 24, S. of T., held on Friday evening, Jan 14th, the following officers were installed for the ensuing quarter:

W. P. Henry L. Holbrook; W. A. Benj. Griggs; R. S. Luke Brannin; A. E. S. Wm. H. Smith; F. S. Chas. F. Wyckoff; Trea. A. H. Harris; Chap. T. K. Shepherd; Con. C. Dabrow; A. C. Jan. L. Meece; J. S. Frank Slater; O. S. J. Gold; P. W. P. Ed. F. Dabrow.

THOROUGHLY TESTED.—This is to certify that I have thoroughly tested Bell's PREPARED PARACARRINE, personally and in my family, and consider it the most speedy curative I have ever tried, and cheerfully recommend it to those who are in search of a specific for Coughs, Colds or Croup.

HOLMES BIDDLE. Matawan, Dec. 21st, 1869. Prepared and sold at Bell's Drug Store, Matawan. Read the places offered for sale by P. A. Schanck, Real Estate Agent, in our advertising columns.

Orchard street has been opened through to Center street.

COUNTY.

Rev. B. S. Everett, from the Presbytery of Newark, has been installed pastor of the church at Jamesburg.

The Golden Wedding of Judge Joseph Murray, of Freehold, was celebrated on New Year's day.

Didn't TAKE.—Another "murder hook," similar to the one perpetrated on the beach about ten years since, was attempted on Monday night last. An old coat was cut and stabbed around the heart and down the back, in a ghastly manner, some blood or paint was daubed around on the railroad depot, and in the pocket of the coat was a letter prepared for the occasion, alluding to a "woman scrape." A yell of agony, too, was heard, and all that it would have taken very well, perhaps, if it had not been for that other performance ten years ago.—Long Branch News.

The Gas Works at Red Bank are completed.

The people of Red Bank and vicinity are becoming fearful that the proposed change of route by the N. J. Southern R. R. will be made, if efforts are not begun to prevent it, and hence the Standard tells us that petitions are being circulated, praying the Legislature to refuse to pass any law permitting the railroad company to abandon any part of the railroad or steamboat route between Toms River and New York, and a meeting has been held to appoint a committee to proceed to Trenton immediately, for the same purpose.

JANUARY.

Six months of our newspaper year have passed away, and with the January number we present our readers with the seventh issue, in our attempt at journalizing. We remember speaking, in our schoolboy days: "Great streams from little fountains flow; Tall oaks from little acorns grow;" and as we have moved along in our effort to work up the newspaper interest in Matawan, we have received the hearty co-operation of our friends. The future wears a brightening aspect, and if the enterprising spirit of our village will but continue, and other assistance be given us in the way of advertising, our "little oak" may yet become a "strong tree" in the groves of American newspapers. A welcome hand has also been extended from a number of journals of more importance than our little sheet in the way of exchanges, and we take this opportunity for making sincere acknowledgments for these favors.

January,—with it we begin another year in life's battles, and it is a very fitting and pleasant custom to wish those who stand side by side with us in the warfare of this world's duties, a Happy New Year.

Lamb had a strong appreciation of New Year's day. He remarks that "no one, of whatever rank, can regard it with indifference." Again he says, "Of all sounds, of all bells, most solemn and touching is the peal which rings out the old year." January is the time for new resolves, and the man or woman who does not at least mentally propose to try and be better this year, must either be very good indeed, or very bad indeed. Even though we may have made such a resolve a year ago, and, retrospectively that year, may see that we have failed fully to live as we promised ourselves, yet, has not the fact that we did this resolve frequently kept us from erring; and should not this induce us to commence the year 1870 with renewed purposes for a life of usefulness and profit?

SCHANCK'S EXCELSIOR STRAW-BERRY.—These have proved to be the leading variety. For quality, durability, productiveness, earliness, shipping, and all the properties that go to make a plant particularly desirable for the farmer, these are destined to rank first and foremost. A lot of one-sixth of an acre yielded nearly $400 worth, in one season. The best reference given, and Plants for sale by P. A. SCHANCK, General Agent, Matawan, N. J.

"O, Wealth of woman—wonderful! O, crown of honor!" The most beautiful crown to deck the head of a woman is a profusion of long, dark, glossy hair. The production of such hair is wonderfully facilitated by the amazing and stimulating properties of Riag's Vegetable Ankerin, which is taking its way to the toilet cases of all American ladies.

Mr. Editor, Why is it that our loaves of bread are not any larger, now that flour is only $8 a barrel, than they were when it was $15?

Advertisements to be inserted must be handed in by the 20th of each month.

CARTAN & CO., Steam Saw, Planing, Re-Slitting, Scroll Sawing, & GRIST MILLS. Matawan, New Jersey. We furnish the Best Flour in the county.

A. H. HARRIS.

WISTAR'S BALSAM. READ THE FOLLOWING!! This is to certify that I had a very severe cough, accompanied with night-sweats, which so reduced my bodily strength that I could not walk from my house to the barn, (a distance of about 200 yards) without resting. Having tried several remedies with but little benefit, I was at length induced to try "Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry," and in a short time my health was restored, so that I am now enabled to attend to all the duties required on my farm as well as ever. My night-sweats have entirely ceased, and my cough very seldom troubles me. I consider it the best cough remedy ever offered to the public. ISAIAH HOFF. Near Keyport, N. J. For sale by Geo. W. Bell, Druggist, Matawan, N. J.

Written for the Journal.
 FAREWELL TO THE OLD YEAR.
 Gone to its death, out on the breath
 Of December, to bleak and so cold,
 A hurried sleep, with sorrowful song—
 Coming twelve days to its goal.
 Awaiting with age, with look of a sage,
 Though but one year ago he was born
 He's faded each day and laid it away,
 To wait for the great judgment morn.
 Successful to the year now laid in its bed—
 December—so bleak and so cold,
 Was laid at the grave where the others were
 To sleep with the Centurion old.

 WRITTEN AFTER READING THE MEMORIAL OF WILLIAM LEVINE THOMPSON.

A had you had of promise rare,
 On which we lavished tenderest care,
 Whose worth and sweetness, from its birth
 Made paradise for you on earth.
 But He who marks the sparrow's fall,
 Had seen its winning graces all,
 And in celestial gardens fair
 Has placed it under Angels' care.
 That match the mantle of His love,
 Your hat of gold blossom thus above,
 And chief its perfume, pure and sweet,
 Arouse the blomid Seraph's feet.
 Then wrap her in a happy youth,
 Who's pained like the scales of truth—
 With tartarum, yea, and golden dust,
 He'll give to walk the golden street,
 To keep upon the Saviour's feet—
 To see that he has won the race;
 As, looking through the "Golden Gate,"
 He'll see you coming from afar,
 With lamps all trimmed and burning bright,
 And smile in joy with heavenly light.
 And there among the blessed throng,
 You'll find the last one mourned so long;
 And O, what joy your boy to greet,
 Where all his worshippers shall meet;
 Where all things flow from love and truth,
 Where all things grow from love and truth.

A Widened Vision.—If it be true that "something is to be learned from everything," even the historical narrative and the staid judge in the following story, may teach us that we can easily injure our own cause by making too many words about it.

"May it please the Court," said a lawyer before a Dutch justice, the other day,
 "this is a case of the greatest importance.
 While the American eagle, whose piercing eyes watch over the welfare of this mighty republic, and whose wings extend from the Alleghenies to the rock chain of the West, was rejoicing in his pride of place—"

"Stop dare! stop dare, I say! Vat has the vult to do mit eagle? High has nothing to do mit de bird?" "It is voocheep!" exclaimed the justice.

"True, your honor; but my client has rights here."

"Ye client has no right to do eagle."
 "Of course he has not, but the law of language—"

"Yet cares I for de law of de language?
 I understand de state, and dat is enough for me." "Continue your talk to de case."
 "Well, then, my client, the defendant in this case, is charged with stealing a sheep, and"—

"Dat vill do. Your client is charged mit stealfing a sheep. Just nice shillin. De court vill adjourn."

An ox and two cows undertook, a few days since, in Washington county, Ohio, to chew tobacco. They all died.

Faber has got so fat on his pencils that he seldom leaves the house. Girls grow thin on that sort of diet.

One morning I found little Dora busy at the ironing table, smoothing the towels and stockings. "Isn't it hard work for the little arms," I asked. A look like squashing came into her face, as she glanced toward her mother who was rocking the baby. "It isn't hard work when I do it for mama," she said softly.

WHY AN ENDOWMENT
LIFE INSURANCE
 IN DEPENDENT OF CHANCE.
 Every one having to do with the uncertainty of death, or the needs of dependents, and companies, the greater probability of new business is of this description. A case is known where a man recently took out a policy for $10,000. Other companies are carrying policies to the amount of $500, $100,000, $25,000, etc. The same policy, and on one of the best of almost any flourishing company would make a handsome sum.
 The value of the premium is a kind of assurance in plain English. It is an amount that is paid at 50, 60, or 70 years of age, gets beyond the need of insurance for the protection of his family, and rather needs assistance himself—at least needs the money he would have to be paying on a whole life policy. The Assurance Company just meets this case. It furnishes protection to his family at the time when he provides that who has not already acquired a competency beyond a doubt, can afford to pay with guaranty of a comfortable support for his own advanced age.
 An aged merchant in New York, once in affliction, but now reduced to bankruptcy, remarked: "Had I taken an endowment policy thirty years ago, I should not have felt the pressure from year to year, and I should have saved something to support me now in my old age."
