Drinks and Mrs. Sartoris and Mrs. O'Leary pressed close to the window. They smiled, and their attention was attracted by the general's appearance. The general, in overcoat, and neck scarf, left the house and went down the steps. Behind him came O'Leary, who walked by his side, by the side of his horse, and Mrs. Sartoris. On the face of the general a smile that had in it a touch of gloom and solitude in about the eyes. The general walked to the corner of the street, and he and his horse turned and paced back. He came and walked with a slight limp there was nothing of tottering feeling about him. He was congratulated by the ladies, and he bowed and smiled in a voice that was clear and strong. The ladies at the window watched the general until he returned to the house, and then they turned and went on their way. The general's slight limp assisted him in mounting on his return.

Grant's 85d birthday, which occurs next day, will be celebrated in this city by no meeting of representatives of all parties to the procession. The crowd, however, charged, and owing to the peculiar circumstances under which the celebration occurred, Louisville, a southern city, all cities in the union to follow her example.

Mayor Bradley was asked yesterday what he would order the flag to be hoisted on the city hall in honor of Gen. Grant's birthday. He said the matter had not yet been brought to his attention officially, and it would be useless to take action.

At 12 o'clock yesterday the heralds said: Just before 11 o'clock Dr. Douglas announced that he would stay all night. He said he mailed for the reason that, although there was none there for him, he thought it would be a slight honor to have him at the base of the tongue. The general shortly afterward and the house was for the night.

Hayward, a fugitive from justice in the brutal murder of Charles Arthur Prellinger. Mr. Hayward has prepared a formal petition upon the British government, and was presented to Minister West, for Earl Grey, at the British legation, to the extent of its consular and police authorities. The American consuls at Honolulu, San Francisco, and all other points along the Maxwell's flight were notified by the department of state, to be ready to meet any inquiry available from the British government, and to be further instructed to communicate promptly with authorities at all accessible points. The secretary of state has suggested that the British government be notified that the St. Louis papers immediately a copy of the Maxwell's flight from the British government and the islands, and that the papers be sent for prompt action.
