

A FEUD ENDS IN MURDER

James Hannon Killed by Tarrytown's Chief of Police.

THEY WERE POLITICAL ENEMIES.

The tragedy took place at the Democratic primary election, the man shot in the falling place and Hannon followed the Chief out to meet death.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Feb. 18.—At the Democratic primary, held in Judge Tarrytown's office, on Courtland street, this place, James Hannon, a lifelong resident of the village, was shot and killed by Chief of Police George F. Hackett.

The feud which led to the murder is said to have been smoldering under the usually quiet political surface of Tarrytown for some time past. There are two Democratic factions in the village, one of which was headed by Hannon, while the opponents carried the banner of Livermore.

The primaries were held to elect delegates to the town and county convention, to be held at Peekskill. Both factions were present in full strength, and both determined to have their men go to the convention.

Hannon, in the excitement of the debate, raised his voice to its full force and was threatened with removal from the meeting by Chief of Police Hackett, who was then Hannon's behavior as noisy and boisterous and as quite unbecoming. A serious quarrel ensued, and when Chief Hackett retired from the room and went into the street, Hannon immediately followed with the apparent purpose of renewing the quarrel, which Hackett had cut short by leaving the room. He continued to use insulting language and was replied to by the chief in the same manner.

Hannon was armed with a club and threatened to use it. The chief then pulled his revolver, and when Hannon's club came close to fall upon his head, there was a flash and a loud report, and Hannon fell upon his hands and fell backward upon the sidewalk.

The greatest excitement prevailed among the large number of bystanders. Hannon was taken up from the sidewalk and carried to the hospital, where he died a few minutes later.

"This fellow Hackett ought to be banished from police society. He's a perfect booby." "How so, Mr. Tully?" "You remember that honkey I made at dinner?" "Well, he was ill mannered enough to get it was original with him. This shows how his politeness is a mere disguise." "Yes, nobody but an ignorant could have thought you were Sidney Smith."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The Resolution to Retain Mexico's Central Battle Flag Passed the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The senate, after showing kindly courtesy to Mexico by passing joint resolution to restore her captured battle flags and declaring another resolution looking to the acquisition of a portion of her territory, devoted the rest of the day to the consideration of the Idaho canon.

Senator Palmer, of Illinois, was severe in his criticism of the minority of the committee on privileges and elections for weighing state rights in an apothecary's shop and attempting to deprive Idaho of representation on a basis so narrow as that proposed.

The senate adjourned with the Idaho canon still pending.

The session of the house was principally devoted to the debate on the Indian appropriation bill, the Farmers' Alliance entering the discussion through their spokesman, Mr. Bland, of Georgia, who delivered a tirade against the power of national banks and the power of the government generally.

The debate at times was interesting and spicy, and the house listened intently. A resolution was adopted under the subject; also a joint resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information as to the amount of salt imported into the United States between October, 1890, and February, 1892.
