

THE G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT

Vice President Morton Will Officiate for the President.

A PROMPT RESPONSE TO THE CALL

The Program, It is Hoped, May Now Be Carried Out in Full—A Hot Contest Over the Commandership—Sanitary Precautions Are Needed in the Capital.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—President Harrison's place at the G. A. R. national encampment next week will be taken by Vice President Morton. The president will not be present, owing to the serious illness of Mrs. Harrison, who made known definitely to the committee, and arrangements were at once begun to bring the vice president to Washington. In response to a telegram John Jay Edson, chairman of the executive committee, today received the following from Vice President Morton at his country place, Rhinecliff, N. Y.: "Will leave for Washington Sunday and will hold myself in readiness for any required duty during the encampment."

As far as possible the vice president will represent the president, and expect prompt by the reception to the veterans at the White House, it is believed the programme arranged for next week will be carried out. The vice president will be present at the dedication of Grand Army place, Monday, and at the reception and concert at the pension bureau, and will review the parade from the president's stand. It is hoped that the reception at the White House which was to be one of the events of the week, may yet be arranged.

The streets are filling up rapidly with the expected visitors. A few of the G. A. R. points have come in, but the bulk of the arrivals are attracted by the immense gathering expected. Adjutant General Plater was the first grand encampment official to put in an appearance. He arrived to supervise the preliminaries and make things ready for General Palmer, grand commander, who will be here Sunday. The greatest number of visitors and delegates will reach Washington that day.

The Next Commander. The contest over the election of a grand commander in chief promises to be the most interesting feature of the encampment, and it will not be settled from present appearances without something of a struggle. The avowed candidates are Colonel Charles P. Lincoln, deputy commander of pensioners, General William H. Wisconsin, and General Hurst, of Ohio. Colonel Lincoln would not have got a "black eye," as it were, in the action of the district department last night, when it was voted to present the name of Captain J. M. Pipe for senior vice commander in chief. Since 1883 this office, by courtesy, has been given to the department entertaining the encampment.

Of course the election of Colonel Lincoln as grand commander would put Captain Pipe out of the ring, and his friends expect the sentiment in favor of doing away with the custom of choosing the senior vice commander in chief to aid them in bringing it about. They are quite sanguine of success, asserting that he has already a sufficient number of delegates pledged to elect him. Other members of the district department expect General Waters to be elected. He was chosen senior vice commander under General Alger at Milwaukee and was an unsuccessful candidate with Colonel Lincoln against General Palmer at Detroit last year.

That the next encampment will go to Indianapolis seems to be conceded. Chicago has withdrawn any claim she may have had and will support Indianapolis. The only other city so far named is Denver, and it is said the voters now for the purpose of getting a good position to fight for the encampment of 1904.

Sanitary Precautions Necessary. The appearance of cholera in New York occasions great uneasiness among the citizens of Washington in view of the fact that 200,000 strangers, coming from all parts of the country, will be crowded together here next week. Every arrangement has been made for the comfort of the guests, but the sanitary conditions will not be perfect and would be favorable to the rapid spread of the disease should it appear here during the encampment.

The camp is on low ground, with only temporary sewerage, and the school houses which will be occupied are not supplied with the conveniences of dwellings. The authorities speak lightly of the danger and they will do well to take greater precautions than they have yet taken.

Federal authorities will do all they can to help to preserve the healthful surroundings of the veterans during their visit. Secretary Foster said that he does not think there is any danger to the encampment from cholera. He said that he did not regard the situation in New York as very serious, believing that the disease would not be allowed to spread. He did not think there was reason to apprehend its appearance here, nor that it would in any way interfere with the encampment.
