* Man Who Never Usvoil. There is a wandering tribe of the Salara called the Toaregs, a strange people, surposed by some to have deseconded from the crusaders and distinguished by the wearing of rells a custom that has occasioned much discussion. The Tuarers guard their eyes against the glare of the desert by two vells, one rolled round the temples and falling down in frent of the even, the other reaching from the neatribs to the edge of the clothing corering the lower part of the face. All manner of learned arguments have been addresed to explain this custom. but hypitue is obviously the only motive. This is shown by the statements of the Turrect themselves and by the sobriquet "mouths for fies," which they apply to all who do not wear the wells. It is enid that the Tuarege never remove their vells, even at mealtimes. Indeed, they are so much a part of their wearers that any one deprivat of such covering is unrecogmined by his friends and relatives.
