Delos Hawkins was one who was afflicted with the craze. Notwithstanding the misgivings of his mother, he packed his valise hastily, and prepared to depart with a party of others as orazy as himself. Just before the bidding of farewells, his mother handed him small Bible with a golden clasp :

"I see," said Fred, sadly, " we live in different worlds. She cannot come to mine, and 1, cannot, go to hers ; and so t is letter for both of us perhaps, that she will not marry me. But she will never find a man to love her better than do. As to Charteris -----"I hope she may never to the quality of his love," said Grace. "She certainly never will, until Major March st fortune lielps her to it in one way or the other. And there is no danger at all of that now, I suppose ?" "I hope not," said Fred, with favor, and I think not." " If I were in your place," stid Miss Belmont, "I should not give up hope. Just now she prefers. Mr. Char eris to you-prefers that k adjof man. But she is so young, she may change ; and when once she is married, she is so true a woman, and has too sound a heart not to love her husband devotedly, whoever he may be. A few minutes afterwards, having parted with her at her own door. he is retracing his steps home and. walks rapidly until he has left the Bel mont grounds and is in the woods. Then his pace slackens; he saunters along slowly, meditating as he goes. He began to think over the conversation that had just passed. "Grace is right in saving she will love her husband, whoever he may be, if he deserves it; and no doubt she will feel a certain interest in the things that ** He interest him. But it will be a fain and reflected interest, not the appreciative similathy which I should want," he thought. "It is better to give her up my Constance, my Constance, as I have always called her in my heart ! But her woman's instinct is right; she would never be happy with me. No; whether she marries that pidful puppy or not, I know-I feel-that the will never marry He folded his are s tightly across his breast, as if to still the agony of regret that was rending his heart. It is the hope of years, the dream of his boyhood, the passion of his manhood that he is giving up as he strides on with a step slow and heavy; but he is giving her up. He realizes to night for the first Bhid time that it is a vain hope, and to his nature anything like insincerity, even to himself, is impossible. When he returned to Thistlewood in the summer he had meant to enter at once upon the study of the profession he had chosen-the law, having agreed at his uncle's earnest and reiterated en treaties to make Thistlewood his headquarters while studying ; but, racked at the time as he was by love and jealousy, he had farther allowed himself to be persuaded into delaying the fulfilment of this purpose just then. Warm weather is not the time to study, my boy," his uncle had said to him. "If you will presist in making a drudge of yourself when there's no necessity for your doing 80, wait till October or November to begin. Your system will be braced then. Ho had siniled at the latter clause of this sentence, but nevertheless complies with the advice given; and when he heard of Constance's return home, the uncontrollable temptation to make one more attempt to win her made him write to Grace, with the result already He had said to himself when he ridated started from Thistlewood that this was Constance will his last venture ; that if he saw reasonnble hope of final success he would, Jucob-like, wait any length of time; but if, on the contrary, there were no probability of a change in Constances' feelings towards him he would no longer remain the slave of a hopeless passion. He does not falter now. Dust to dust, ashes to ashes !" he feels, as he desire is taken away !"

It may be that some cherish the conjecture that both methods, substantially, can be employed; but this is a delusion. If we adopt the party method we must adhere to it, and make it success ful party methods, or we must fall. There is no such thing as securing the sympathy and cooperation of the good men in the other parties without inducing them to abandon their party affiliations and join the new party which we propose for them. Analyses and careful examinations of Cleveland's Superior and Royal Baking Powders enable us to bear testimony to the superiority of Cleveland's. It yields more carbonic acid gas than the Royal, and contains no ammonia salts. Cleveland's Baking Powder is made of pure substances and is absolutely free from any kind of adulteration. We endorse it most cordially as an honest and efficient article, and one that will give entirely satisfactory results.
