"The Duke of Arcos has fled!" said he. So much the better, for he only knew how to pillage, assassinate and betray. The peole are intelligent enough to govern for themselves, and strong enough to defend the independence they have conquered. I de-clare that Philip the Fourth, king of Spain, has forfeited the throne of Naples, both he and his descendants! Long live our Lady nd our liberty!"

"Long live our leader! long live Masani allof" added the insurgents. Masaniello was carried in triumph to the errace in front of the chamber in which the cene we have just related took place. The streets were filled with noisy and motey crowds of women, peasants, fishermen nd lazaroni, who were rejoicing over their ictory, and singing their national songs. The combat had ceased, and not a soldier ras to be seen anywhere. They had all taken refuge in the Castel-Nuovo, on the towers of which they were already pointing with joy. An immense shout ran throughout the city when the Neapolitan flag was seen floating or the terrace of the Vicaria.

But a greater one still was raised when he who had planted it there was recognized. He motioned the people to be silent, "No more Spaniardal" cried he. "Long live Masaniello, the head of the people?" replied the multitude. "No more taxes!"

"Yes," added Masaniello; "let him go, though he takes with him my last hope-my only love!" "You weep, my son!" exclaimed the monk who was still ignorant of the dreadful secret which Salvator Rosa had divulged.

"Francesco," said Masaniello, "one day has sufficed to destroy all my happiness." "What do you mean?" "This young girl I loved"----"For whom I would sacrifice all, my life. ny liberty-is Isabella, the daughter of the Duke of Arcos!" "Unfortunate man!" exclaimed the monk Abundant tears ran down the fisherman's unburned cheeks. "All is lost!" murmured the monk. "No! no!" exclaimed Masaniello. "We must now think of restoring order among the people, whose worst passions are let loose."
"Halloo! why you're soon learned the language of his excellency, Monsignore the Duke of Arcos. Per Bacco! With your torn hose,

"Laugh as much as you like, Corcelli, but rest assured that you will not leave Naples alive, unless you obey the orders of the little viceroy who so much delights you." Jeanne listened no longer to her brother, but raised a curtain, and Isabella appeared before Masaniello. "My father! my father!" exclaimed she what have you done with my father?

Massniello drew back with affright, for Isabella was no longer the gay, smiling being he was wont to see but her features were pale and haggard, while her eyes were sed with weeping.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.

ESSON III. FOURTH QUARTER, IN-TERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 21.

Text of the Lesson, Josh iv, 19-24-Commit Vernes 20-23-Golden Text, Josh iv, 23-Commentary by Rev. D. M.

Condensed from Lemon Helper Courterly, by permission of H. S. Hoffman, Philadelphia publisher. In the first chapter of this book we saw Joshua encouraged; in the accord, the two spies received and protected by Rahab, and bringing to Joshua further encouragement; in the third, the preparations for the crossing of the Jordan and the actual passing over; and now in the fourth we have a more full account of the passing over, with the details concerning the twelvestones. In some of our hymns we sing about Jordan as if it were a symbol of death, and as if Canan represented heaven; but a very little thought would show us that the fact that in Canaan there were many enemies to be subdued and much fighting to be done, proves that it was not a symbol of heaven, nor the Jordan a 10. "The priests which bore the ark stood in the midst of Jordan until everything was finished that the Lord commanded Joshua." Anything unfinished is impossible with God, and all that be has purposed shall in due time be fully accomplished. Jesus said before he was crucified: "I have finished the work." which thou gavest me to do," and one of his last words on the cross was: "It is finished."

Quoting prices of such goods as clothing is unsatisfactory because a description of a garment conveys no impression of its real merit.

We sell boys' strong Blouse Suits as low as $3.50, and we might make quite a talk about our excellent $4.50 and $5 suits, but we want your judgment upon the garments after seeing them in the store and not merely from reading of them. Remember, too, that our label of quality on each garment is the exact fact as ascertained and not a mere guess. We stand by that statement to the extent of refunding your money if the garment fails of reasonable service, quality considered.
