"Mr. Beresford." said the old man gravely, "it is very painful for me to have to speak with greater plainness; will it not be best for us to consider the conversation at an end and your proposal de clined?" "T would rather hear your reasons for declining it plainly, sir," said Jlm, with admirable coolness. "Is that so?" asked Mr. Earle "Yes, sir," returned Jim, "that is so." "Yes, sir," returned Jim, "that is so." "Then I must speak out," said the old mau, with a sort of groan. He hated everything unpleasant, and made a rule of shirking all disagreeables whenever possible. "Well, Mr. Beresford, I must tell you frankly that if you had come to me last autumn and asked for my daugh-ter, I should, if my daughter had been willing, have considered yourself, your family and your income a perfectly desir-able and suitable match for her; but since that time a great deal has happened that time a great deal has happened. You, for instance, have been arrested since then on a suspicion of murder." Jim fairly staggered back as the words passed the old man's lips. "Mr. Earle," he said, hoarsely, "you don't—you surely can't believe that I committed that foul crime?" "If I believed it," hfr. Earle answered, "I should have asked you'to go out of my house some minutes go. Yet there is the fact—you were arrested on suspicion, and a verdict of willful murder against some person or persons unknown is returned. Do you not see that until the case is set at rest one way or the other, you are not, and never can be, free from suspicion? At any time it is liable to rise up against you, not a mere suspicion, but a hideous dan-ger which may overwhelm you! Do you think, Mr. Beresford, that I could or would let my young daughter go head-long into such a danger as that? No, sir, a thousand times not and lat me tall you a thousand times, no; and let me tell you that although I may have antiquated ideas of love and honor, I think you show your wish to love and honor her very to the queen commands me to sneak; but
