Every Child Has Musical Ability

To say that a child has no music in him is not only unfair to the child but also incorrect. Every normal child learns to read and write a language. It only requires study and practice. Of course, a few become editors and writers. Just so with music. Some children who master their scales will become musicians and composers. But all who are encouraged to apply the same effort to music as to arithmetic will learn to play and enjoy a musical instrument. As time marches on the ability to read brings increasing pleasure and enjoyment to everyone. And so it is with a knowledge of music Countless hours are enriched by the ability to read and make music. Al one's senses and emotions through all the years are felt more deeply through the knowledge of music acquired in childhood . . . In a world o changing nations and values great music remains unchanged, as beautiful and inspiring as the day it was written . . . Give your child the life-long blessing of an understanding of this universal emotional language. Select your piance from among the new or used instruments at this "Home of Famous Pianos"
