awareness and provide additional support for research to osteoporosis. Osteoporosis is an age related disorder. characterized by a thinning of bones due to calcium loss. and lower estrogen levels. Over many years, the hones. become brittle and can break, causing pain, disability, and even death. The House of Representatives resently approved egislation appropriating funds for the Department of 1 Health and Human Services for fiscal year 1987. This bill, H.R. 5233, includes funding for a new research center's initiative which I authored as a member of the health and uman services appropriations subcommittee. This initiative appropriates funds for specialized enters of research in three high priority areas, including osteoporosis. The newly established National Institute on Arthritis and Musculoskeletal Diseases will also provide for more targeted research on this tragic disease. Although older men are often afflicted by a senile form of osteoporosis, this disorder primarily afflicts older women. Those who are thin, fair skinned and have sma frames are more susceptible than larger, heavier people. Women who have a family history of osteoporosis, or who have had their ovaries removed at an early age, are I more susceptible to calcium loss. Osteoporosis strikes 15 to 20 million older Americans. One in four women will suffer from some form of osteoporosis following menopause. Weakened bones cause an estimated one million fractures a year. Many older women's bones simply break causing the to fall rather than the fall itself causing the fracture. A hip bone which refuses to heal can make the difference between an independent of dependent lifestyle for an older person. | If you understand a few basic principles, there is no our elderly to still be part of State of New Jersey in ser.
