Training for babysitters offered

By popular demand Rahway Hospital is once again offering its training program for babysitters. taught by registered nurses on the hospital staff. Paricipants have a choice of three dates: Thursday March 12 from 3:30 to 6:30 p.m.; Saturday, March 14 from 9 a.m. to nooh; and a special session just for adults, on Thursday, March 26 from 3:30 to 6:30 p.m.

"The focus of the gram is to prepare babysit ters for how to respond in emergency situations from treating a minor injury to knowing what to do in a case of cardiopul-monary arrest," said Kay

MacVicar, R.N., Nurse Educator and Program Coordinator, The session also covers child care and safety in the home.

Upon completion of the session the participants receive a certificate, and have the option of placing their names on a registry of available babysitters, which is maintained by the hospit al's director of junior volunteers.

The $5 registration fee for the program includes refreshments. For more information and to register call the hospital's Nursing Education Office at 499

DEP approves environmental study for resource recovery facility

The New Jersey Depart ment of Environmental Protection last week approved a preliminary Environmental and Health Impact Statement (EHIS) in another step toward con-struction of Union County's resource recovery facility in Rahway. The approval, signed by Al Montague, chief engineer with the DEP's Division of Waste Management, followed a detailed review by 17 dif-ferent DEP agencies.

The 140-page statement, prepared by the county's environmental consultant, Malcolm Pirnie, Inc. of White Plains, New York, indicated that the proposed waste-to-energy plant would produce "no unavoidable adverse impacts that cannot be reduced to acceptable levels."

The report further stated that the resource recovery facility "will result in a net improvement in air quality because of a significant reduction in truck miles traveled to deliver waste to the facility site versus existing landfill disposal sites." Eighteen of Union County's 21 municipalities currently haul their trash to Edgeboro landfill in Fast Brunswick, a procedure the resource recovery facility will render unnecessary.

The preliminary EHIS describes environmental conditions, analyzes en-vironmental impact and identifies other factors associated with the resource recovery facility. It was conducted for the purpose of assuring state, county and local officials and residents that the project will have no unacceptable impacts or health risks.

According to Joseph E. waste per year for every man, woman and child in the Union County Utilities Authority, DEP approval of the preliminary EHIS paves the way for project financing and purchase of the waste-to-energy plant site — a 23-acre parcel of land off Route 1. The final EHIS will incorporate data from the selected vendor's design and will be the sub-ject of a state-sponsored hearing prior to the DEP's decision to issue permits for construction and operation of the facility. Plans call for construc tion of a mass-burn, fielderected waterwall steam generating system, capable of disposing of 1,440 tons of waste per day. An estimated 476,000 tons of solid waste are generated in Union County each year equivalent to one ton of Waste taken to the resource recovery facility will be dumped into a pit capable of holding three times the plant's capacity, then fed by cranes onto grates that would pass it into a furnace, the report states. A "water wall," consisting of steel water pipes, will line the furnace. Steam created in these pipes will power a turbine, producing approx imately 40 megawatts of lectricity for sale to Public Service Électric & Gas Co.

After the walk-out, Council members Caruso, Eckel, Ellenport and Pozniak stayed and deliberated. They, with suggestions from the Township Clerk Catherine Clancy, voted to reduce the budget by an additional $275,000 without a cut in services that Hayden proposed. The council members who remained were able to exceed the amount proposed by Mr. Hayden by an additional $110,000 in budget reductions.

After having spent two hours on Mr. Hayden's suggestions, it was incumbent on council members Cristiani. Hayden and Pluta to have stayed and offered the other council members their recommendations for budget reductions. Instead, they left the budget meeting!!!

Carol took me aside and told me not to be so hard on myself. During class, I told everyone that I felt like a failure because I was still smoking. I felt good that I had cm down from two and a half packs of cigarettes a day to between three and five on a good day, but I hadn't been successful in quitting altogether. Carol said maybe it just wasn't a good time for me to cold turkey." She made me feel good, I was touched by her concern and support. And that's what you'll find the most of at the Freedom From Smoking Clinic, sponsored by the American Lung Association, Westfield Avenue in Clark. We are all trying to do it together. Peggy and Anita had gone a full week smoke free Peggy had calmed down a bit, she said she felt good. The only problem, she said, was that her husband still smoked. He said he was going to quit too, soon. It must be very difficult for her to abstain when someone is smoking in front of her. I am lucky because no one besides myself smokes

We are given an abundance of information at the neetings. Booklets, leaflets, folders and charts. "A Lifetime of Freedom From Smoking," "Stop Smoking & Stay Trim," "Change Your Thinking" and "Learn To Assert Yourself," all to help us regain control of our lives I find it still a struggle. On some days, Richie's birth day party for instance. I'll smoke up to ten cigarettes Then the next day I try to get it back down again. People's comments help me. All of the readers of these columns lend me their support. And it helps. Maybe I don't feel like such a failure after all.

Three cheers for Rahway volunteers Up at six and on the run,

For a volunteer, the day has just begun Off to work in almost every walk of life, Teacher, fireman, secretary, businessman or housewife Home in time to grab a bite, Then off they go for a busy night life, Deciding such matters as which workshop the hospital should give,

Which play can be produced, what children's programs to offer, or what housing people need to better live. Volunteers develop budgets, decide which purchases should be made. They write policies and schedule fundraisers as well as parades. Volunteers call one another, search for the best price and write newspaper copy.

They give of their talents, and their time which

Monthly meetings are usually the least of the work, They sell tickets, paint buildings, serve dinners, and never shirk.
For we all count on them, they are needed and have worth A city without them has no joy or mirth.

Volunteers insure that human services will be provided, Well rounded programs for the public good which are not one sided, Campaigns for the needy, distribution of information

They are the people who can say, "I knew you could." Volunteers are believers who have visions. They see the future and make decisions.

Improving upon the past and making revisions, Giving unselfishly without conditions. Each gives time and energy to his or her special group,

With an eye to the total community which completes the loop.
For, without any one of our volunteer organizations, We loose a part of our city which effects us all. Our volunteers enable each citizen to stand tall.

A WHALE OF A TALE... Carl H. Kumpf students of Clark had the unique opportunity to hear firsthand observations about whales during a presentation by Stuart Goldman. The special PTA-sponsored program provided pupils with insight about the characteristics and migratory habits of humpback, orca, and baleen whales. Through a slide presentation, Mr. Goldman demonstrated the manner in which whales comunicate, sing, play games, and use balletic movements in synchronous activity. Pictured, left to right, Theresa Ferrara, Richard Velotti, Stephanie Cannone, Paul Belverio, and Mr. Goldman examine a 125-year old walrus tooth engraved in scrimshaw. The tooth is reminiscent of the old whaling days in America.

Rep. Rinaldo pushing air traffic safety

Ren. Matthew J. Rinaido (R-N.J.) said recently that Congress should open up the $6 billion Airport Trust Fund to hire hundreds of safety inspectors for the beleaguered Federal Aviation Administration.

He warned that the FAA inspection staff is stretched too thin, and that the fierce price competition for airline passengers in a deregulated market is forcing marginal carriers to cut corners on aircraft maintenance.

Rinaldo is supporting Administration efforts to tap the Airport Trust Fund to. hire operating personnel to man the control towers and inspect aircraft and flight The Airport Trust Fund which comes from an eight percent tax on airline tickets, is dedicated to capital improvements, such as rebuilding runways, control towers, and introducing new technology.

"The risks of being in a fatal air accident are still very low," Rinaldo said.

"But with more people flying than ever before, and more jumbo jets in use in international service, the potential for a large number of fatalities has increased." Rinaldo warned.

He pointed out that the number of airlines has doubled since the end of 1955, and this growth has placed excessive demands on the FAA inspection force. "Serious questions have been raised at Congressional hearings about the adequacy of staffing levels, the experience of the inspection force, and the promptness and thoroughness of the FAA's inspection training program The shortage of skilled airline technicians to maintain the planes, he pointed the growing danger in the skies. Their number has dropped from 11,000 in 1979 to 6,500. Rinaldo said aviation experts claim the shortage is so acute that the quality of maintenance will soon be impossible to sus-tain. Since deregulation, he added, the workload of inspec tors has greatly expanded with no substantial increase in the number of airline in spectors since the 1960s. He cited a Congressional Research Service report which stated, "Insufficient FAA presence with respect to inspections often results in some air carriers taking advantage of the situation.

"What they're saying, in effect, is that competition in airline fares is driving some marginal carriers to cut cor ners on maintenance be cause the FAA inspectors are not there looking over their shoulders," Rinaldo

He is supporting the budget request of Transpor tation Secretary Elizabeth Dole and FAA Adminis trator Donald Engen to spend $5.8 billion in fiscal 1988. It would increase the funds for inspections and controllers by 15 percent. However, Rinaldo said that the legal restrictions on using Airport Trust Funds for this purpose would have to be changed in order for the FAA to hire 225 more controllers and 178 more air craft inspectors.

Building safer runways and putting new technology in the control towers is a good investment, but it needs to be accompanied by an increase in the inspection force so that air carriers are required to maintain their planes on the ground and operate them safely in the air. Just as the Amtrak accident proved, safety depends on people as much as on technology," Rinaldo said.
