The software allows radar data from the PAA's Automated Terminal Rada System to be displayed on a personal computer. The geographic location of aircraft can be superimposed over highways, roads, terrains and to show the geographic location of aircraft and noise, impacts caused by each flight path on specific homes, hospitals, schools, police stations and communities. The technology will display the flight paths that can offer the most effective noise abatement procedure for a given region.

Developed by Le Tech Inc., the computer software will provide hard data on routes for citizens, elected officials, Continental Airlines, the Port Authority and the Federal Aviation Administration. Pamela Barsam-Brown, executive director of NICAAN, stated, "This will allow route designs to be judged on merit and will minimize if not eliminate, the false and misleading information which has fueled meritless controversies in the past."

Introduction of the computer software comes at a time when public and polit ical sensitivities have been heightened, encouraging Continental Airlines, the PA and the FAA to seek a solution to the aircraft noise problem over New ferrey and Staten Island. Licensing for the software technology called the "Radar and Noise Management System" may be obtained from Le Tech Inc. located in Alexandria, Va. Union resident has learned and earned his love of opera

Fresh from his tour de force in Italy, Thomas Smarglassi III of Union has plunged into his operatic concert work with an energy and ambition reserved for the young. He is 26-years-old.

Smargiassi was last seen in a concert at the South Orange Middle School on Dec. 6. On Dec. 10, he auditioned with the Fils Grand Opera Co. in New York City, and he will be suditioning at the Métropolitan Opera Co. on Jan. 17 when he sings for Jerome Hines, who is in charge of the New Jersey State Opera Music Theater Institute.

"I was in Italy for several months," said the husky operatic singer. He smiled handsomely. "I sang for so many wonderful people, including the voice teacher of Luciano Pavarotti, Maestro Pola. After I sang for him, he said that my voice was 'an extremely important voice in the opera world today.' I was very happy to hear that - from him especially."

In Italy, Smargiassi explained, "I gave local concerts in small towns. It was a wonderful experience for me to learn the culture and the language at the same time. I'm-still not fluent, but that's my next goal." Smargiassi was in Italy "on a Young Artists Program. On a small scale, I performed and learned not just many roles in opera, but the acting, the blocking, the stage combat — in opera there are many violent things going on. I'm just getting that experience and learning these roles. I also took language lessons. Principally important to me is the Italian language. This is what I want to do Smargiassi, who was born in Elizabeth, "lived in Union my whole life. I always liked to sing as a child. From ages 8 to 14-years-old, I sang with my sister, Rachel, who, incidentally, is a professional actress and singer now, and another girl named Jackie. "We sang all the popular tunes at openings for companies, senior citizen groups and in Columbia Presbyterian Hospital in New York City," recalled Supergiassi, "I just always had a strong desire to sing, to entertain and just be on the stage, even while I was in Union High School."

Does he have stage fright whenever he approaches the stage? "I think everyone has stage fright," he mused. "It's a big thing for a lot of people to learn to get over it and turn stage fright into positive energy. I'm still carning, now, even while I go to voice lessons in New York City twice a week. I have sung for my teachers and coaches and in the past had some very impor-

Concerts, said the young opera singer, "requires a different kind of singing. It has always been intense. In more recent months, I have learned to relax, and it made me a better singer because of it. In opera, it's extremely important that you not only know what you're singing, but you must know what every word you're singing about means. So, you fully interpret what you're singing - so that you can put yourself into that character. The minute you, as a singer, get out of that focus, you can become confused. You have to know what the character is supposed to be and what you're supposed to be portraying. You have to be that character. And it's very difficult if you don't understand the language." Smargiassi explained that "I sing in Italian, German, French, Spanish and English. I've been learning languages for about nine years now. There's a different level now. I believe you never get to a part saying, 'I've learned everything there is to know about one field or subject matter.' The more I learn every day, the more I realize how much I don't know. I speak Italian good enough to get by. I'm third generation Italian-American, so it isn't really used at home. "Actually," he said, "you really have to learn it from scratch. Once that happens, I'll be understanding more of what I'm singing. You get a lot more confidence as a singer. I believe that is the key to good performances and auditions."

Smargiassi has been singing professionally for "four or five years now. This has been my life. Oh, I have other interests. Golf, for example. I love to golf, my life was permanently changed."

Smargiassi beamed. "I started having a wonderful appreciation of opera, a ove for the music, solely because of what it was doing for my voice. Then after

I studied voice at the Newark Community School of the Arts in Lincoln Park."

After graduating from Union High School in 1989, Smargiassi "auditioned for the Manhattan School of Music and the Juilliard School of Music, both in

New York City., and I found the Manhattan School had a better vocal staff. I was accepted in 1990 and had been there through 1995, during which time I studied with the chair of the voice department, Maitland Peters, who is still my voice teacher today."

He made his Broadway professional debut, "at an AIDS benefit at the Lambs Theater in New York City. There were 10 singers, and I was a featured soloist. I

'Bring Him Home' and 'Maria.' It went over extremely well. And ever since, I was giving concerts throughout the Metropolitan area. I performed four operas at the Regina Opera Co. in Brooklyn, 'Carmen,' 'Tusca,' 'Otello' and

'Rigoletto.'

While tailpipe emissions may be the most obvious automotive "pollution," in reality the entire life cycle of a car produces waste. From mining resources and producing raw goods to transporting products and manufacturing vehicles, not to mention vehicle use of consumables and, finally, disposal of vehicles, sources of pollution exist. Volvo has helped develop a tool to measure all environmental aspects of a Volvo's life cycle: It is called Environmental Volvo environmental experts and engineers, the Swedish Environmental Research Institute and the Swedish Fedcration of Industries, have measured every step of the manufacturing, operation and disposal processes. Using their unit of measurement that qualifies the environmental impact of each element of a car.

Adding together the ELUs of the aluminum, iron, glass, plastics, leather, vinyl and every other material found in a car. Volvo can then vary the use of components in order to methods attain a lower total ELU. For example, the plastic inner fender well cover can be made from virgin plastic or recycled, but the virgin plastic has a higher ELU, so recycled plastic would be used.

The ELU includes every aspect of a component. Mercedes-Benz sets another sales record

Mercedes-Benz of North America announced that it set an all-time sales milestone in the U.S. market by retailing its 100,000th vehicle within a calendar year. The company's highest annual sales volume had previously been 99,314 in 1986. The mainstay of MBNA's sales volume continues to be its core model lines: the mid-size C-Class sedans, the full-size E-Class sedan and wagon models, the flagship S-Class sedans and CL coupes and its renowned SL Coupe/Roadster.

The record-setting 100,000th vehicle was a Calypso green 1998 C280 sedan purchased by Nancy Casavant of Somersworth, New Hampshire by Dreher—Holloway Inc. in Exeter. In recognition of the milestone event, Mercedes-Benz awarded the vehicle to Casavant - free of charge -dur-
