RAILWAY DEFEATS ELIZABETH A. A.

Freddie Olde, holds Ruben Bond's aggregation to three scattered hits.

With neither side scoring until the ninth inning when the Railway team's runner overtook the Elizabeth A. A. to the local fans was given the best game in the history of baseball in this city. It was a classic struggle of near-legendary runs from miles and the slightest slip would have decided the game for either side. Fortunately the slip was made by the visitors and Railway quickly took advantage of it, but had not the winning run occurred when it did, there was every indication that the home team was going to win. The game was a two-runners-on-base and a single out when Parrell made the wild throw that won the game.

Although it was something of a pitchers' battle with Oliver leading the honors by allowing only three hits, the game was also a hitting game, both sides contributing some sensational plays. Although each side had made attempts to push runners around the circuit by all of the best players known to baseball and with runners often threatening to score, the necessary punch to win the game was lacking owing to the superior pitching supported by remarkable holding runs.

In the ninth inning Ericsson stepped to the plate and drove out an out to left and the game was decided by Elmer Armstrong. With two out he hit home run after hitting a base hit. He connected with the ball, intending to bunt and dashed for first. Parrell readily got the sphere, but in his anxiety to stop the runner and give opportunity for a double play he threw the ball wide of first base and three runners walked home, but as it was the last half of the ninth inning was sufficient to decide the contest.

It looked as if Railway intended to clinch the game at the start, for at the first inning Captain Dave Armstrong reached first on a bunt, and he hit to right field. Arthur Armstrong advanced his uncle by a slide to right. With two on and none out the chances looked good for Railway, but Parrell tightened and there was nothing doing.

In the sixth frame the Elizabethans gave the locals a bad scare by hitting the bases, but Olde's delivery was too clever for the visitors. He made the necessary sacrifice, in the second with two out Olde's aggression was too strong for a rally, but a double steal was nipped in the bud by Davis to Arthur to Davis. Railway threw a ball for a rally again in the fourth after Ericsson had singled and Elmer Armstrong had reached base. Mullus sacrificed, but Beck and Davis could not find a vulnerable spot in the visitors' ranks.

Parrell of the nine thins Olde with cheapness of his delivery, in the seventh inning Olde hit a home run, but the Railway team was not to be outdone on strikes in a triple over an out.

Although being the best game ever seen at Riverside Park it was also a record-breaker by being the quickest contest ever played by the representative teams of the city. Only one hour and five minutes were occupied from start to finish of the contest. "Ruler" Manager Bill Brown's only have not lost a game and are going better each struggle.
