FIND TRUE HAPPINESS....
 FISH ON THE ISLANDS!

Fishing has been really good around the islands recently. Above are Rudy Dubravitz and his son Jerry with their catch of snook, redfish and trout. The Dubravitzes are from Orlando. Below, Mr. Rich Becker and Mr. Al Hoffsberg, both from Sarasota and both staying at South Seas Plantation, display their fine catch. Bob Sabatino was the guide on both fishing forays.

NEWS FROM FLORIDA STATE BOARD OF HEALTH

Have you ever spent the time at a picnic, patio party or some other outdoor activity swatting mosquitoes?

Summertime is the time for such events but many a Florida outing has been ruined by these persistent pests. Dr. Wilson T. Sowder, Division of Health (successor to the State Board of Health) reminds Floridians and their visitors that mosquitoes carry mosquito-borne encephalitis and urges all persons to use insect repellents on any occasion when mosquito exposure is likely.

Dr. Sowder adds that repellents are especially useful at twilight and in the early evening when mosquitoes usually swarm.

GOLDEN VOICE BOBBY VERNON TO SING AT THE SANDS

Roy Webb of Golden Sands has engaged Bobby Vernon for the opening entertainment season shortly coming up.

Bobby is a one man Kingston Trio, with a spicy dressing of Hank Williams, Burl Ives and others of that type. Easy going renditions of standards and mod hits are mixed with original compositions are on tap to woo patrons to the Sands six nights a week.

It is said that Bobby's show is informal and inovative, accomplished by requests, visiting guests and talent that will make one return again and again. According to information, Gaspar brought the girls -- Bobby brought the entertainment. Request his modern version of "Tiny Bubbles" for a surprise.

Florida is "blessed" with insects of all types--both harmful and beneficial, according to the Florida Nurserymen and Growers Association (FNGA). Many bugs are nuisances. A few of these that you might see around your home are earwigs, snails, slugs, and wasps. Slugs and snails may at times give you a small problem on annuals, but as a rule they do no harm to grass and plants. If control becomes necessary, one of the best materials is metaldehyde. This material is available in a bait or a spray.

By now you should have small green tomatoes on your plants, and a sharp eye should be cast for pickle worms. This is a fat, green, caterpillar which eats into the fruit just at time of maturity. Sevin is probably one of the better controls since it is relatively non-toxic.

Leaf miners become a serious problem on many of our ornamentals and vegetables in the fall months. Azaleas are very subject to Surpentine leaf miner, and so are tomatoes. These tiny insects live between the upper and lower surfaces of the leaf and eat their ways through the middle section of the leaf. The result is a snake-like white streak. Leaf miners can be controlled by repeated applications of Diazinon.

The fall months bring about another problem on azaleas--the azalea defoliator. Worms of this family are rather large, 1 1/2 to 2 inches long, sparsely covered with hairs, black and yellow with a red head. When the bush is touched or moved, the caterpillar has a tendency to raise its head and tail end. These caterpillars congregate in groups of several hundred and can defoliate a small bush almost over night. A stomach poisoning is the best control. Sevin, DDT, or Toxaphene will do the job.

ANCHORS AWAY

There's something about boating that stimulates an appetite like nothing else. To insure happy memories of your outing on the water, it's important to give plenty of planning time to keep your hungry crew well fed.

If it's just a day-long trip, you can probably rely on a home-made picnic lunch. Plan a longer cruise, though, and you'd be wise to consider hot, well-balanced meals.

If your boat is equipped with a stove, you've probably already learned what food to stock and how to cook it. For the novice nautical chef, however, here are a few hints that might be of some help.

A portable stove should be stowed onboard if you don't want to cook over a shoreside campfire. Choose one with tow burners, large enough to handle a big skillet and a saucepan at the same time. Use your everyday pots and pans from home.

A portable, top-loading ice chest is also necessary these days. So are those tight-sealed plastic food containers (which incidentally, offer other storage benefits once the food is gone.)

To keep cool liquids cool and hot liquids hot, use insulated jugs and thermos bottles as required.

Paper plates and cups and plastic tableware are worth their light weight in storage ease, there're no automatic dishwashers in the outdoors!

And don't forget the rest of the accessories --- things like salt and pepper in moisture-resistant containers, matches, wrapped in a waterproof covering, lots of paper napkins.

Preparing a menu beforehand will reward itself later. Think in terms of big, hot breakfasts; quick, easy-to-fix lunches; and hot, ample dinners.

A portable cooler probably won't hold everything you want to take along, so scout the supermarket for easily-stored canned and boxed foods. Be sure to hold perishable foods to a minimum.

And don't forget any special dietary foods that may be required.

Even the most experienced boat chef occasionally will leave something important behind. It happens to everyone, so don't worry.

Unless you're cruising the remotest of waters, you'll probably come across a store along the way where you can replenish your supplies.

But just in case --- don't forget the can-opener.

SOMEWHERE
GENERATION GAP!!!

Dear Goldie,

My boyfriend told me he wants to get a Mohawk hair cut, I was so shocked I didn't know what to say. The boys I've seen wearing them look terrible. I would rather see him in long hair than a Mohawk. How can I convince him to get a normal haircut?

/s/ Upset.

Dear Upset,

This is a phase most boys go through and it's better to let them go through with it than try and stop them. Just grin and bear it. This style of hair cut doesn't last long.

Dear Goldie,

Fishing is my hobby and I spend a great deal of my spare time at this sport. My wife is always complaining about being left alone so much, I've tried taking her along but she gets tired, the bugs bother her, she gets cold or too hot, she's hungry and constantly asks when we are going home. She doesn't like to fish or swim, I don't think she enjoys the water at all. I don't like staying home watching TV and my wife doesn't like to fish. What can I do?

/s/ Fishing Bug.

Dear Fishing Bug,

The small truck campers come in handy in such cases. They fit on the back of a truck and make one comfortable size room. While you're fishing your wife could be cooking or watching TV in the camper. You would be doing what you want to do and she could do the same without feeling left out of things. Also learning to compromise is one of the best rules in a marriage.

Dear Goldie,

Even though I've been married for 10 years, my wife doesn't understand me, yet my beautiful blond secretary does. What shall I do?

/s/ Un-understood.

Dear Un-understood,

Be glad your wife doesn't!
