Erosion district reports return of 50 percent of MSTU petitions

By Scott Martell

Despite an agreement with the Captiva Civic Association to limit new public parking on that island to 200 spaces, Captiva Erosion Prevention District officials are finding taxpayers are still slow to return their Municipal Services Taxing Unit petitions.

The proposed MSTU would finance a maximum of $2.5 million of an estimated total $6 million cost for renourishing the lower two-thirds of Captiva's shore.

As of Monday 115 of 221 MSTU petitions, or slightly more than 50 percent, had been turned in to the CEPD office.

At least 60 percent of the petitions must be returned to the district before CEPD officials can ask Lee County to begin the procedure to form the special taxing unit.

Because more than 50 percent of the petitions have been returned to date, a hearing could be held to determine if sufficient interest exists to continue seeking local funds for renourishment.

Following the April 12 decision to limit parking on Captiva, CEPD Chairman Richard Butzer authorized

Goss wants Causeway speed limits raised

By Barbara Brudage

If Lee County Commissioner Porter Goss has his way the speed limit on the Sanibel Causeway will be raised to 35 mph.

Goss said Friday increasing the speed limit to 35 mph on the spoil islands and the two low bridges has the blessing of Ben Pratt, director of the county's Department of Transportation.

But Pratt recommends that the 20 mph limit should be retained on the drawbridge, Goss said, adding that he favors a slightly slower limit for all trucks.

The current 20 mph speed limit on all three bridges and 30 mph on the islands is "widely ignored" by motorists, Goss said, and is seldom enforced by the county sheriff's department that has jurisdiction.

Goss said that in the past few months he has crossed the Causeway almost daily to go to his county commission office in Fort Myers and has yet to observe a single motorist heading the 20 mph limit.

"It's foolish to keep in effect restrictions that are not enforced. It tends to decrease respect for the law," Goss said.

In addition the lower speeds are no longer justified by the latest report on the condition of the bridge by Gee & Jensen Engineers, he said.

Concerns that vibrations generated by high speeds were causing structural damage to the bridge pilings led to lowering the limits two or three years ago.

A change in the Causeway speed limits must be approved by the County Commission, Goss said. His fellow commissioners and County Administrator Lavon Wisler have been informed of his proposal, Goss said, and he expects the changes will be discussed at a regular commission meeting in a week or two.

Fall festival plans unveiled, new chamber directors named

By Cindy Chalmers

Plans for the 1983 Fall Festival of the Islands were unveiled at the 29th annual meeting of the Sanibel-Captiva Chamber of Commerce on April 15.

Chamber officials hope the festival designed to bring business to the Islands during October, which is traditionally the slowest month of the year, will become an annual event.

Committee chairmen have been working for several weeks to organize a host of weekend events including a marathon run, sailing regatta, tennis and golf tournaments and a fishing derby.

Chamber members watched a slide presentation by the island's own Al Milliken about the possibilities an annual fall festival on the islands.

Outgoing President Bill reviewed the chamber's accomplishments of the past year.

A bird's fancy turns to nesting By David Meardon

It's spring, and for many birds that means nesting season. All over the Islands a myriad of birds from ospreys to hawks and cardinals to yellow-crowned night herons are busy building nests and rearing young. The pileated woodpecker is no exception. The large crow-sized bird with the distinctive call — a rising and falling cuk-cuk-cuk — can be seen nesting in hollowed out dead palm trees. One of the more visible areas is at Woody's Health Foods on Periwinkle Way, where nesting pair has produced three young that will soon be ready to fledge. Their crowns not yet the vibrant red that distinguishes the mature pileated, the three-week-old babies can be seen peering out of the nest, warily observing the outside world. Home life must still be appealing, however, as the baby woodpeckers are served a steady ration of carpenter ants by their parents. In the spirit of cooperation, a pair of sparrows have hollowed out their own nest at the top of the palm, making a split level duplex out of the tree. The pileated woodpecker usually inhabits mature deciduous or mixed forests and can be found from Canada to the Gulf states and nearly to the Mexican border. Adept at keeping out of sight, it is nevertheless quite visible this nesting season.

These adult pileated woodpeckers, right and left, have their spring work cut out for them as they raise three young that will soon be ready to fledge. The sparrow at left is one of a pair that has made its home above the woodpeckers in the same palm tree near Woody's Health Foods on Periwinkle Way.

AN EYE FOR THE ISLANDS

By Maggie Greenberg

As a rule, Islanders do not come into contact with several thousand people on any given day. While a drive along Periwinkle or a trip to Bailey's during the height of the season certainly provides an acute awareness of horrendous burdens, actual contact is largely limited to collisions of cars or stepping carts. Surely no resident or visitor cares for that form of socializing!

Fortunately, we are now blessed with a magnificent event that promises to become an annual rite of spring: The Taste of the Islands.

On Sunday, April 24, we set the clocks ahead one hour. Shortly thereafter, from both sides of the creaking Causeway, some 4,000 people of every age and description flocked to the Dunes for a day of fantastic food and family fun.

Many did not know that the proceeds went to CROW. Many were unaware of the charitable generosity of American Express and countless island restaurants or of Marjorie's willingness to make its fine facilities available to a very small organization dedicated to the Care and Rehabilitation of Wildlife.

But several thousand people had a splendid time, displayed great good humor — and made it possible for CROW to care for all manner of injured wildlife for well over two months.

My own role in this wonderful event was very minor — I volunteered (at the eleventh hour, to be sure) to collect admission donations from incoming cars. Somehow, a two-hour shift turned into a full day — and ended with the rather dubious pleasure of counting thousands of dollars destined for a noble cause whose worth clearly precluded any personal flirtation with instant fame and fortune.

Naturally, I was not the only volunteer. Nearly 40 people devoted a good portion of the day to collecting donations at various points, selling T-shirts or covering a vast area in a golf cart. Surely they all came into contact with a wide spectrum of the human comedy.

However, I like to think my own experience was utterly unique. After all, I held the fort on Bailey Road with one of Sanibel's very finest, Officer Michael Blackmore.

Cars that got by me never got by Officer Blackmore. His stentorian voice could bring a cement mixer to a screeching halt. His patience was seemingly endless, although vehicles that threatened to make a U-turn on the grass gave him an apoplectic fit.

With traffic backed up to the Causeway, I learned a great deal in very short order. Some people, for example, have an innate aversion to paying an admission donation. Thus, they often claimed to be jolly fishermen, beachgoers, Dunes residents or guests of Dunes residents. Naturally, it was impossible to distinguish the real fishermen, beachgoers, etc. from the impostors.

"Keep 'em moving! Keep 'em moving!" shouted the telegenic Officer Blackmore as I struggled in the strong wind to change a $100 bill for a $2 donation or tried to hurry along a car whose occupants wanted to know "what is on the menu?" or responded to a line-lemming's query, "What's this all about, anyway?"

What's a line-lemming, anyway? Well, a line-lemming is someone who cannot resist joining a long line of cars. He has no idea where they are going but it is determined not to miss whatever it is they are going to — or fleeing from.

The line-lemming's infinitely patient spirit of adventure is often rewarded with a fine view of a raging holocaust, a five-car collision or the scene of a multiple murder.

Of course, a Sanibel line-lemming might well find himself on the other side of the Causeway! In fact, a number of drivers turned onto Bailey Road on the logical assumption that such a ghastly traffic jam would indeed lead them to the Causeway. "You dumb bunny!" (or words to that effect) shrieked oneirate wife to her hapless husband.

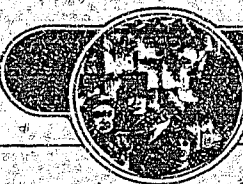

Once people realized that Bailey Road did not lead to the Causeway, they sought to make a U-turn on the grass. While I might tactfully suggest that "You know, you really shouldn't do that," Officer Blackmore's technique was infinitely more effective.

By mid-afternoon, Officer Blackmore had moved all volunteers off Bailey Road and into the Dunes. Only he and I remained on that congested thoroughfare. Then, all of a sudden, only I remained on Bailey Road. Officer Blackmore had abandoned me to the mercy of oncoming wheels and fenders!

Of course, he was probably away for no more than five minutes. During that time I stood like a pinny right smack in the middle of the road, endeavored to look both authoritative and graceful while directing traffic into the Dunes and prayed that no one would run over me when I wasn't looking. Fortunately, people are very kind.

The patience, good humor and generosity of the several thousand people who attended The Taste of the Islands continued throughout the day. They did not seem to mind waiting in line for food, and they laughed when strong winds blew the filling right out

COMMENTARY

AARP chapter urges county consideration of funds for Sanibel Community Association

A copy of the following letter to Lee County Commissioner Porter Goss was given to The Islander for publication.

Dear Commissioner Goss:

You will recall that recently the city of Sanibel generously committed up to $10,000 of its limited funds to assist the Sanibel Community Association in paying down its stable mortgage that was incurred for needed expansion of its community building.

The association has served well the Island's recreational and civic needs for over 60 years without seeking county funds that have traditionally been made available to many other communities throughout the county. Like those other facilities, the association's buildings and grounds have been recognized by the Tax Collector as satisfying a needed governmental purpose and have been accorded property tax exemption.

While essentially manned by volunteer help, the mounting costs of maintenance and operations as well as the high cost of borrowing money has threatened to adversely curtail the efficacy of the association's mission. The need for public funding from the county has become apparent.

This newly-formed local chapter of the American Association of Retired Persons is very impressed with the vision of the Sanibel Community Association's role in serving, among others, the Island's large senior-citizen population.

Accordingly, we believe it appropriate that a proportionate share of county funds be allocated to the association to continue satisfying the public purpose to which it is dedicated. We request, therefore, that you discuss this urgent matter with your fellow commissioners and advise to what extent and when the needed allocation of county funds may be forthcoming.

Sincerely,
Henry Shelton,

Islander would like moped-car ratio reversed

Poem/laments the passing of season

A copy of the following poem by Islander Joe Searing was given to The Islander for publication.

Where have all the snowbirds gone
Just recently so many?
The C of C can't get along
When Pale won't send them any.

"Never a stranger in Paradise"
The self-serving slogan said.
But now it seems that Adam
May have fallen out of bed.

Now we get to park at Bailey's
And the check-out lines are short.
Now we tennis forth daily
And we always get a court.

Now we dread not Periwinkle
Do we miss those flighty snowbirds?
Well — uh — maybe just a pinch.

Attorney La Croix reports on status of lawsuits

The city of Sanibel has filed an amended answer to the Carbro Inc. lawsuit that charges the city with intent to change the zoning to commercial on the property the corporation owns on Periwinkle Way is "unreasonable, arbitrary and discriminatory."

City Attorney David La Croix said Circuit Judge William Nelson has granted the city's motion to raise an additional defense that Carbro, a Kentucky corporation, is not qualified to do business in the state of Florida.

La Croix said without this qualification a corporation cannot initiate litigation. To qualify, a corporation must register with the Florida Department of State and pay a tax, he added.

Carbro, Inc. owns the land and building on Periwinkle Way that is now occupied by FAB Oyster Company. The property was zoned commercial when the Fitzpatrick family acquired it in 1953 and has been used as a restaurant since 1972.

When Sanibel adopted its land use plan in 1976 the property was placed in the residential district and the restaurant was designated a lawfully existing commercial use.

Under new commercial regulations adopted in February 1982, lawfully existing use property can no longer be expanded or its use changed, and after Jan. 1, 1990, cannot be rebuilt if destroyed more than 50 percent.

In August 1982 Carbro Inc. filed a specific amendment seeking relief through a change to commercial zoning. The council denied this request because the change would conflict with the city's objective to stop strip commercial zoning on Periwinkle

Way. A suit filed in September 1982 in Lee County Circuit Court, Carbro seeks "full compensation for the taking without due process of law of the only beneficial use for which the property is suited (commercial)."

The suit charges the city's action is "inverse condemnation."

The city has emerged a victor in another lawsuit, La Croix reported.

The federal district court in Tampa has ruled that DeValle Goldsmith lost his standing in his suit challenging Sanibel's beach parking regulations when he became a permanent resident in January.

Goldsmith's suit, filed a year ago, charged the city's parking law discriminated against him as a part time resident. At the time Goldsmith lived in his golf front condominium only three months during the winter.

The city's parking ordinance makes a distinction between non-resident taxpayers and bona fide residents.

Non-resident taxpayers can purchase $1 restricted parking permits that allow them to park at five beach accesses for one year. Bona fide residents with $1 residential permits can park at 14 beach areas.

Goldsmith maintained that distinction was "discriminatory and violated his constitutional civil rights as an American citizen."

When Goldsmith purchased a residential permit in January, he became a full time resident and lost his standing in the case, La Croix said.

Committee advises council on saltwater fisheries bill

On the recommendation of the city's Marine Advisory Committee the City Council will propose a bill pending in the state legislature that would establish a Marine Fisheries Commission within the Department of Natural Resources to manage saltwater fisheries.

Instead the council today will pass a resolution supporting an alternative bill (HB 242) that transfers control and regulation of the state's saltwater fishing resources to the Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission and renames the agency the Florida Wildlife and Fisheries Commission.

Two weeks ago State Sen. Frank Manly, who is backing the Marine Fisheries Commission bill (HB 194), requested the council pass a resolution urging passage of the legislation that he said would "remove saltwater fishery management from politics and from the commercial bias exhibited in DNR's philosophy."

But before taking any action the council asked the Marine Advisory Committee to review the bill and make a recommendation.

The committee concluded that the proposed commission would merely be a duplication of duties now carried out by the DNR.

Additional expense would be incurred to pay salaries of an executive director and 11 commissioners solely for the purpose of developing rules that would require approval by the governor and cabinet, the advisory committee pointed out.

"In brief it would continue business as usual" for the Department of Natural Resources," Fritz Stoppelbein, MAC acting chairman, said.

"Four powerful organizations interested in the protection and restoration of Florida's saltwater fisheries have joined forces to move Marine Resources from the Department of Natural Resources to the Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission, Stoppelbein said.

The Florida League of Anglers, Florida Wildlife Federation, Everglades Protection Association and Pro Fish are leading the effort to get the issue before the voters at the 1984 election, he said.

However, these groups point out that placing marine resources and law enforcement under the Game Commission is not aimed at commercial interests.

"They are interested in good management for the resource, not in benefiting any particular interest group," Stoppelbein said.

On the other hand, the DNR, which in its management of saltwater fisheries has leaned heavily in favor of commercial interests, is lobbying for passage of the Marine Fisheries Commission bill.

City Attorney David La Croix will also be present to the council today, a resolution requesting that the local legislative delegation introduce an amendment to Chapter 370 of state statutes to permit municipalities to impose regulations on the taking of fish, shellfish and other marine wildlife within municipal boundaries.

City says no to covered boat davit

Listening to neighbors who feared a row of covered boat houses would obstruct their view and create a "shanty town," the Planning Commission denied George and Diane McCusker's request to put a roof on a boat davit on the canal behind their Sanibel Harbours home.

The only covered boathouses in the subdivision between the bay and canal are located on the western side of the canal across from the McCuskers' home. But that area was reserved for boat storage for residents whose homes front on the bay and not for residential use, the planning staff reported.

Most canal lots in Sanibel Harbours have small wooden or concrete docks with minimal extensions into the waterway.

The McCuskers sought a development permit to construct a covered boat lift that would extend 26 feet into the canal.

The neighbors agreed it would not interfere with navigation. But they objected to the roof 6 1/2 feet above the seawall, which they said would obstruct their view of the canal.

McCuskers insisted he had a right to protect his boat from sun and rain. When the properties on either side are developed the homes will be elevated to at least 12 feet above mean sea level and his boat house would have no impact on anyone's view, he reasoned.

Thirteen of the 39 property owners in Sanibel Harbours objected to the boathouse. Six were in favor and 19 did not respond to the questionnaire sent out by the neighborhood association.

Donald Herriott said most were afraid that permitted, the covered boathouse would set a precedent and all the owners of canal property would want a roof over their docks.

Commissioner Harold Schuyler did not agree with the staff's opinion that boathouses are "not a use normally incidental" to single-family residential properties on waterways.

"The reason most people buy property on a canal is to have a place to keep their boats," Schuyler said.

Commissioner Emily Barefield, who said she keeps her canoe under her house, said she objects to covered structures on the canal and made the motion to deny the development permit.

Commissioner Jerry Muench was the only dissenter in the 5-1 vote. He said it would not be precedent setting at this location across from existing boathouses and would not be a navigational hazard.

Commission okays four-unit condo near Tigua Cay

Despite objections from residents of neighboring Tigua Cay the Planning Commission last week approved a deviation to the land use plan to permit a four-unit condominium 63 feet from the centerline of East Gulf Drive.

Matthew Hurwitz, who owns one of Tigua Cay's four units, complained that the 45-foot high building proposed by Neister Development Corporation is not compatible with Tigua Cay, that is only 15 feet high.

Hurwitz asked that the design be changed to incorporate a less imposing roof line. The developer seems to be "maxing out" the use of the 100-foot lot that is only half the size of Tigua Cay's parcel, he maintained.

Developer Bob Meister told the commission the footprint of the building has already been reduced to 3,300 square feet and that the percentages of impermeable coverage and vegetation clearance are only half that allowed under CLUP.

Meister has agreed to the Planning Department conditions that that units will have strictly residential use and will not be used for resort housing.

The developer has also agreed to heavily landscape the front and side yards.

Commissioner Jerry Muench's motion to approve the deviation to the road setback passed 6-4. Chairman Ann Winterbotham was absent.

Revised Ferry Landing plans approved

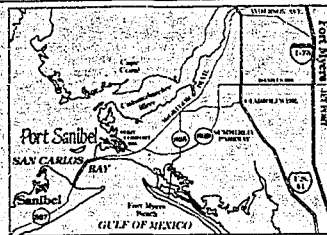

Architect Ray Fenton's revised site plan for Ferry Landing, originally designed as an 18-unit, nine-building duplex complex, was approved by the Planning Commission last week without comment.

The new plan calls for 12 single-family homes and only six duplex units (three buildings) facing the bay, a swimming pool and two tennis courts.

Revised plans approved for Ferry Landing continued courts on a parcel at Lighthouse Way and Ferry Road.

The dwelling units are sited on 18 small "homesites," each smaller than the minimum lot size required by the Comprehensive Land Use Plan.

This land division is more comparable to a condominium unit than to a subdivision lot, Fenton explained, with each owner sharing common ownership of the project's amenities.

But Planning Director Bruce Rogers explained that dwelling units cannot be constructed on these lots separate from the Ferry Landing project.

The original duplex project had accumulated ROGO allocations for 12 units over a year and a half period.

Last fall, when it appeared duplexes were not marketable, Fenton received permission from the Planning Commission to use one of the allocations to construct a single-family home on the site to test a new concept combining the two modes of housing.

The early Florida style house has been received enthusiastically, Fenton said, adding the project will proceed now that the revised plan has been approved.

Ferry Landing must comply with other multi-family projects for ROGO allocations for six more dwelling units needed to complete the complex, Rogers said.

Modeling course okayed, development permit not necessary

The Planning Commission agreed last week that Keri Lamb did not need a development permit to conduct a six-week modeling course at the Rhythmic Exercises, Inc. studio in Pelican Place.

A temporary class teaching islanders from two to 25 the basics of good modeling does not equate with establishing a new business, which would require a development permit.

ON THE WATER

By Captain Mike Fuery

In the here-we-go-again department, the Florida legislative session is in full swing and a pair of bills under consideration will, I feel, cause monumental damage to the tourist related sportfishing business.

It seems that each year when it comes time for the state legislators to get together in Tallahassee someone comes up with a bill to change for a saltwater fishing license. This year it might come to pass, and if it does I expect a great many tourists will stop fishing altogether.

House Bill 244 and companion Senate Bill 705 will set in motion the mechanics for implementing a $10 fee for a two-week term for out-of-state visitors if they want to wet a line in Florida coastal waters.

If you are a Florida resident, don't feel left out — you'll pay $5 so you can fish in your favorite spot. If you can't prove you live in Florida year around, then you'll have to fork over $20 for that annual license.

It is estimated that the proposed licenses will generate somewhere around $34 million. I suspect, as you might, too, that figure is enough to make state bureaucrats go crazy with ideas on how to spend the money.

Of course, some reasons are given for the license fee. One is that the money will go for more and better law enforcement. We could use that. Our handful of Florida Marine Patrolmen can't possibly check each boat in Pine Island Sound for undersized sea trout — one reason many blame for a decline in trout fishing this year.

The license fee money could also be used for research on how to manage our fishing resources. That usually means the addition of staffs that make studies and do research and in the end tell us what we knew anyway — but they put it on a state agency letterhead.

What are the chances of the two bills passing? Right now anglers and commercial fishermen from around Florida are calling, writing and visiting their representatives to draw support against the bills. I certainly have to agree.

Here are some problems I see with a saltwater license. First, speaking as a professional fishing guide, I have to think about the typical fishing group of four anglers I might get. Usually it's two couples. But sometimes it's four men, and often it's a father and three kids or a mother, father and two kids.

Now think of this. Let's say a father and mother and their teenage son and daughter want to fish for half a day. The cost of their licenses — for a one time only use — would be $40. If you are bringing down two teenagers, feeding them and entertaining them, I believe you would think twice about paying out $40 on top of the $10 to $20 fee for half-day chartering, too.

What's going to happen then? Two things. Either they drop out two anglers, which is difficult to do in a family, or they don't go at all.

I have several families that come to Sanibel half a dozen times a year and charter me each time. Would they pay $20 each for an annual out-of-state license? I doubt it.

Okay, that's looking at the problem from one fishing guide's view. Now multiply that by the 25 or so guides on the islands and by the hundreds of guides in the Florida Keys and many more times by the guides in other parts of the state.

The end result is a huge amount of out-of-state anglers who are going to say it's just too expensive to buy a fishing license. And that would result in a devastating loss of business for all of Florida's sportfishing industry.

I'm sure that if you figured in the loss from bait and tackle shops, boat dealers and other sportfishing related items, the figure would be well over the $34 million they say will come from the licenses.

Vested interest? You bet! I don't see a need to create a new bureaucracy in the state capital that will study fishing for five years at only $34 million-plus per year and write me a letter in the end to say the fishing isn't what it used to be.

Check the last yellow page of the telephone book for the numbers of our local representatives. Let them know how you feel about House Bill 244 and Senate Bill 705.

SHELLING TIPS

By Captain Mike Fuery

Who would ever think Sanibel's shells would come to the attention of the annual meeting of the state lawmakers in the capitol? That's just what's happening now in an indirect way.

Perhaps you recall that earlier this year the city of Sanibel considered a law that would stop or greatly restrict the taking of live shells from island waters.

There was a great deal of controversy over the issue, and it seemed a compromise would be reached to allow shellers to take two live shells per species per day from Sanibel. That's how the city's resolution reads now.

But when the city attorney researched the issue he reported the city did not have the power to stop or restrict live shelling after all. As it worked out, proposed changes in the state law were under consideration just before the beginning of the annual legislative session. The proposals would change existing marine laws and in the process would allow the city to request jurisdiction over shelling in and around its waters.

I still think there should be some legal limit on live shells, and perhaps this limit will be imposed in the next few months. Stay tuned and I'll let you know if you are legal or criminal for scuffling up a live tulip or two.

On the rare occasions that my wife, Carol, and I get away from the islands we often end up in shell shops or at the closest beach looking for either shells or fish.

Recently we spent a couple of days over on Hutchinson Island near Fort Pierce with Carol's parents, Jim and Polly Bailey. We were surprised at the kind of shells that were washing up on that island.

Good shelling isn't limited to Sanibel and Captiva, of course. There is some terrific collecting in the Florida Keys and in spots all around the state. The only trouble with east coast shelling is that the red system offshore tends to break up good shells. So walking Hutchinson Island laka palatance if you want good shells.

On our recent visit my mother-in-law, Polly showed me two outstanding shells she had just found. A year ago as we walked the Atlantic beach he picked up a perfect paper argonaut.

On the wall near a deck was a perfect golden lion's paw. I've seen our typical reddish-brown lion's paws before, but never have I come upon a golden colored shell like this.

Lion's paws seem to be found in spurts. Two years ago I bet we found a dozen in a few months' time. But I can't recall finding more than two this past year. And I still have never found a full pair of these valued large scollaps.

One other interesting find from the Hutchinson Island beach was what I believed was a meacled cowry. I've never found any of the several cowry shells around Sanibel or Captiva islands. They are generally thought of as shells that live from the Florida Keys into the southern Caribbean island areas.

The cowry looks like a gigantic bubble shell and is very shiny with spots (that's where the meacled part comes in). It has a prominent opening on the underside where the living marine animal feeds and from where it moves.

Polly said another lady on the beach found a similar shell at about the same time, and like the prized lion's paw and paper argonaut, none have been found before or after.

Good shelling on our beaches this week, and if you do get to travel around the state, plan a few stops at the beaches for shells.

Capt. Mike Fuery offers daily shelling trips to North Captiva and Cayo Costa Islands. Call Mike at 472-3459 for information.

Pending hurricane season prompts alert radio campaign

With hurricane season approaching once again Sanibel police are reminding islanders that special alert radios can link their homes and businesses with vital emergency communications.

More than 150 homes on the island already have the specially adapted radios that receive emergency messages from the Sanibel police dispatcher.

But Officer Jack Primm who coordinates the alert radio program, wants more homeowners to purchase the radios to ensure the best and most complete notification system in the event of a hurricane threat.

We cannot guarantee the best and most complete notification if residents do not have the radios," he explained, adding that he hopes eventually to have an alert radio in every island residence.

Even this winter the radios broadcast important messages about traffic conditions, power outages and twice when the Causeway bridge malfunctioned. So far the comments from purchasers have been about 90 percent positive and have indicated the radios are a valuable and useful tool, Primm said.

And as the June 1 opening of hurricane season approaches he is stepping up the campaign to place radios throughout the island. It's the best means of getting the message out, he said.

The radios incorporate a special alert siren that is triggered by the Sanibel Police Department transmitter. The units operate under AC power and automatically switch to battery power in an outage. Operation of the radios is simple, and the small units take little space on a counter top or table.

Residents can purchase the Radio Shack units at cost through the Sanibel Police Recreation Club for $56. The basic weather alert radios are filled with a special crystal to receive the Sanibel emergency frequency.

To order a radio complete the form below and mail it to the Sanibel Police Recreation Club, P.O. Box 438, Sanibel 33957 or deliver it to police headquarters above the Three Star grocery store on Palms Ridge Road. Checks should be made payable to the Sanibel Police Recreation Club.

Upper Captiva

Charting the winds of change on the barrier islands' barrier island

By Scott Mariell

The air is still as we walk through the ancient dunes built up over centuries inland on the state-owned portion of Upper Captiva.

Bruce Waters points out a frigate bird doing cartwheels high in the air and a red-shouldered hawk perched on a tree.

"Notice how the vegetation is so much thicker down in the gullies," Waters says, explaining that the dune ridges are more barren because they are farther from the water table.

Leaving a gully choked with joe wood and palm, we walk right into a clearing full of trees, a corroded battery, tin and nameless junk.

"Damn. Some people just don't think," Waters says with an angry shake of his head.

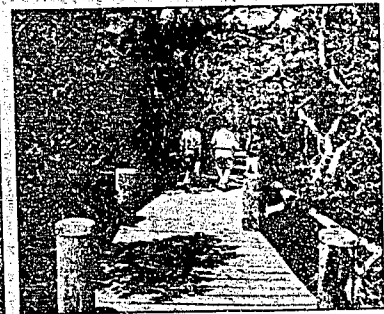

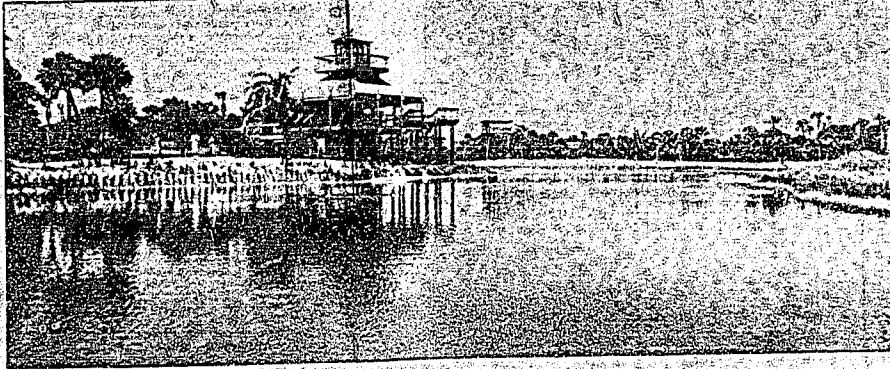

Listening to Waters one might assume he is president of the Sierra Club. But he is instead the vice-president of the Safety Harbor Corp., a development group that is building an 87-unit planned unit development on Upper Captiva.

While it is evident that Waters holds a great love for the "wilds," he would seem more at home behind a desk closing a $115,900 deal on lot 15 at Safety Harbor, checking elegant house designs or signing a contract to bring electricity to Upper Captiva.

As of last week electric power was on its way to primitive Upper Captiva, with full service scheduled to begin no later than Aug. 8.

The first spark of mainland power could signify radical change on the island. A case can be made that this change is inevitable. And a case can be made that the change has very finite limitations. But the change should not pass unnoticed.

Birth of an island

The island of Upper Captiva was "born" in October 1921 when a powerful hurricane swept inland at the heart of Captiva. Nine-foot tides Redfish Pass and dividing Captiva roughly in half.

Since that time, the 59-acre barrier island Upper Captiva has remained isolated with no connecting causeway or bridge.

The island came under the state's eye as a good acquisition for future generations because it was a type of land rapidly becoming extinct through development. Under the auspices of the Environmentally Endangered Land Act and the Conservation and Recreational Land Act, the state acquired funds and purchased the lower three-fourths of Upper Captiva.

The remaining 150 acres on the north end of Upper Captiva presented a problem for the state. Most of this section had been subdivided by landowners in the 1960's and 1970's. About 400 landowners would have to be convinced to sell should the state desire to buy the entire island.

State officials looked south and saw with pride the three quarters of Upper Captiva that would be preserved. They looked north and saw the shores of Cayo Costa, an almost entirely state-owned barrier island.

Then, considering the cost of buying out 400 landowners, the state backed away and left the 150 acres on Upper Captiva alone. After all, only a few homes and several fishing camps existed on the land — there were no paved roads, no accessibility except by boat and no electricity.

On a map of the privately owned section of Upper Captiva land parcels glare out like squares on a large chess board, with one notable exception. The Safety Harbor planned unit development cuts a 32-acre swath through the center of the chess board.

It was the New England-based Realty Development Group of Camden, Me., that noticed this section of land was owned by only two landowners, Dr. Calvin Brown and Peter Lippy.

In November 1960, with somewhat of a gamble, RDG plunked down $680,000 for the 32-acre parcel that stretches from the gulf to Pine Island Sound at Safety Harbor.

Just one year later, the newly-formed Safety Harbor Corp., having stimulated inflation on the island, bought an additional 10 acres, including one 5¼-acre parcel for $750,000.

The development was planned so a "village" with a denser population would sit on the 5¼-acre parcel by the harbor. The village would contain 24 home units in 17 duplexes.

The larger 32-acre plot would contain 63 homesites with an almost equal amount of "common" area including a manmade lake, Tennis courts, a pool, a birdtower and a clubhouse were quickly laid out; and Safety Harbor soon began to do what it had set out to do — develop, sell and build.

To date 37 of 63 lots have been sold, three homes have been built and six homes are under construction.

The ball is rolling. Eventually it will stop, but only when the limit of 87 family units in the planned unit development is reached.

The remaining 100 acres on the island contain about 363 lots that could accommodate a maximum of 454 family units on the private sector of Upper Captiva. Give each household three members, and the total Upper Captiva population could reach 1,350.

Bruce Waters is quick to mention that the trend is for landowners to buy up their neighbor's land, providing more individual space. He estimates a total of 250 to 300 family units, or, by our hypothetical population formula, a population growth limit of 750 to 900 people outside of Safety Harbor.

Currently about a dozen families make Upper Captiva their permanent home.

Questions in Utopia

The story has it that as pilot Gordon Biggar flies his Pan Am jet over Upper Captiva he picks up his intercom and tells his passengers, "We are now flying over Utopia, ladies and gentlemen."

Most visitors would be hard pressed to disagree with Biggar, who also happens to own a lot on the island.

Yet questions are raised when looking at growth and development on a barrier island. For this article we focused solely on Safety Harbor and sought Waters' thoughts on such concerns as hurricane awareness, beach erosion and the impact of all this growth and development on flora and fauna.

Hurricanes are a natural consideration for anyone who lives on a barrier island in Florida. After all, it was a 1921 hurricane that "created" Upper Captiva by opening Redfish Pass.

But the island has one thing that could be in its favor in the face of a hurricane. Developing several hundred yards off the beach is a series of shoals with fingers of sand and breakers. It wouldn't stop wave surges, but it could conceivably slow them down.

And Waters even maintains residents of Safety Harbor would be better off in an evacuation than residents of Sanibel and Captiva would be. "Our people will all know boats and will, in fact, probably own boats," he says. "And we'd never have the jam they might have down there."

So the people will be able to get off Upper Captiva. But they will have to leave their homes behind.

Structures in Safety Harbor are built according to official specifications for a 100-year storm, which means they should withstand a 125-mph wind and escape a 13½-foot storm surge, according to Peter McKinney, the construction supervisor for the development.

The homes are also built with continuous connections from the pilings to the roof to prevent uplift, McKinney explains. And pilings are driven into the ground at a slow 100 blows per foot to compact the shell base around the piling. The pilings are 10 inches square, and those by the gulf can be no farther than 10 feet apart.

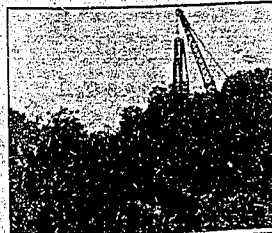

The construction code stipulates that the home floor must be at least 12½ feet above sea level. But most in Safety Harbor are higher, considering the 10-foot dune and the fact that most folks want at least headroom under their home, Waters says.

"The county has a fairly tough building code on the islands," McKinney says. "Then they give the architect some latitude on what is enough. I'd say we're on the conservative side," he adds.

Whether all of these precautions will actually save Safety Harbor in a major hurricane, is, of course, pure speculation. Most of these techniques have never been tested under a severe hurricane.

Another problem worth considering is erosion along the shores of Upper Captiva. This is a critical problem on lower Captiva, where it was necessary to create a Captiva Erosion Prevention District to study and implement techniques to save the beaches.

Waters is encouraged that the offshore shoals are continuing to develop, perhaps negating much of the current that could swirl away the beachfront.

Near the beach a series of 10-foot dunes rises, covered with natural vegetation such as joe wood and sea grapes. On the landward side of the Department of Natural Resources Coastal Construction Setback Line, Safety Harbor has begun to plant sea oats and spartina to further build up the dune system.

"The idea is that the dunes system will act as a counterforce against the force of the waves," Waters explains. "Of course this is all theory," he adds. "It might not hold back the wave action of a big storm, but it should slow it down."

Of gopher turtles and sea grapes

The major impact of development of Upper Captiva will be on the flora and fauna of the area. Last December Waters attempted a manatee walkway in the harbor area. Should others appear once the development is complete is anyone's guess.

But Safety Harbor has initiated a serious effort to protect both vegetation and wildlife on the barrier island.

The developers sought an environmental plan for the site from Sanibel environmentalist Mark Westall and are following through on some of his advice.

Tactics to preserve fish and wildlife range from capturing gopher turtles before construction begins and then returning them near their old hole when the construction is complete, to aerating the freshwater lake to prevent a sudden fish kill.

And instead of clearing vegetation before construction, the builders will transplant the healthy trees and landscape later using the natural vegetation.

The harbor has a well-marked channel so boats will avoid the shallow and fertile grass beds. A raised wooden walkway carries visitors through the mangrove thickets between the dock and the beginning of the development. A similar walkway is built over the dunes to the beach.

All these environmentally conscious plans should prove valuable. The end result of the development, however, can only be speculative. No one can doubt that the natural environment will somehow be affected.

Progress

"Since the Safety Harbor area is going to be developed, I'm sure glad we've had a chance to be the ones to do it, considering our environmental background," Waters says as we walk through the still undeveloped sections of Safety Harbor. "I mean," he adds, "We know how to handle the environmental issues and still make a buck."

Private feelings run even deeper. Waters glances around. "Watching as the development goes up, I do feel some ambivalence," he says. "I remember this area as it once was."

This feeling of ambivalence, tinged with a sense of sadness, stimulated by the inevitability of the development of the private section of Upper Captiva and by the inevitability of "progress," perhaps better phrased as "growth," seems to tell the whole story.

Dick Traucht cannot tell lie, so he admits freely that he wasn't too crazy about Sanibel when he first set foot on the island 11 years ago.

But one year after that first visit, he moved his wife, Mary Lou, and two of their four children to Sanibel. They left behind the "mom-and-pop" restaurant they had run in Gambier, Ohio, for a venture in condominium management — something Traucht had never done before.

He became the first manager of Mariner Pointe condominiums, which were under construction along with most of the other early condos on the island. Now he sees that things run smoothly in the 101 Mariner Pointe units that occupy 80 acres of land just west of the Sanibel Causeway.

"If it doesn't run well, I have to make it run well," he says, adding a bit modestly. "All it really takes is common sense — it's like running a big house."

It might take "just common sense" to keep 101 garbage disposals, twelve that many bathtubs and two swimming pools in tip-top shape. But it takes a whole lot more to do it with a smile and a cheerful good word for everyone, which is what Traucht does best.

"I guess it boils down to wanting to make people happy," he says. "That's what I like to do." And if hard work is involved that's even better.

When Traucht finds time to relax, he spends it with his five grandchildren, all of whom live nearby and spark a twinkle in their grandfather's eye at the mention of their names. The rest of the clan followed suit shortly after Traucht made the first move, and now all four Traucht children and their families also call Florida home.

"I think it would have been harder to adjust to Florida without the kids," he says with pride that only a father can know. "We probably would have stayed even if the kids didn't come down," he adds. "But let's just say I'm glad we're all here now."

He also plays softball on the island's famed 50-Pins team, even though he admits it's a sobering experience for someone who's not in top physical shape. "Now I put the Ben Gay on before I even go out on the field," he says with a grin. "I pulled muscle after muscle that first season."

The fact that he can even pull a muscle playing softball is a minor miracle, however: Shortly after World War II doctors told Traucht he would be wheelchair-bound within a year.

Arthritis of the spine confined him to the hospital for months, but Traucht somehow walked away. "I thought I was in really bad shape," he remembers of his days at the veteran's hospital. "But there were guys in there a heck of a lot worse off than I was."

As a member of the Sanibel-Captiva Rotary Club, Traucht puts his his restaurant background to use at the annual pancake breakfast. "But that's as close as I ever want to get to restaurant work again," he vows. "I'll do it for the club. That's it."

A charter member of the local Rotary Club, he is this year's Paul Harris Fellow and has never missed a meeting. Even when he's on vacation he visits other clubs. "It's a small world," he says. "Every time I go to Rotary, no matter where I am, I meet someone who is an acquaintance or at least an acquaintance of an acquaintance."

"He wouldn't boast so himself, but it's probably safe to say every new acquaintance Traucht makes becomes a friend or at least feels the warmth and genuine concern he has for his fellow man."

"It's just what I like to do," he says. "I really do like to make friends and help out when I can."

The commissioners concurred. Lamb, an experienced modeling instructor and the state coordinator for a national pageant system, said her project is part time and low profit. "It would take all the profits to cover the cost of both an occupational license and a development permit," she said. The class will be scheduled for two hours one weekday evening and on Saturday for six weeks beginning this month, she said. Commissioner Emily Barefield called this function "compatible" with the theme of the present use of the facility, while Commissioner Henry McKee thought it was "practical to get as much use from the building as possible." When Lamb applied for an occupational license to conduct the modeling course Code Enforcement Officer Dick Baker was uncertain whether the venture should be classified as a new business and asked for a review by the commission.

Commission denies request for house on undersized lot

Although the 7,160-square-foot, unrecorded subdivision near Blind Pass is considered "buildable" by city standards, the Planning Commission last week denied Susan Atkins' request for a deviation to permit a two-story home on the lot 45 feet from the centerline of Coconut Drive.

The planning staff had recommended approval of the request even though the site is far short of the 19,800-square-foot minimum lot size required by CLUP in the wetlands lowlands ecological zone. "It's been the rule," Planning Director Bruce Rogers explained, "that in modern platted subdivisions lots not in common ownership in July 1976 can be built on without regard to minimum lot size."

Request denied for house on undersized lot continued

Step Connolly, who owns property in the same area, said she has not been able to get a development permit to build on her 19,800-square-foot lot because the city is questioning whether the survey used to subdivide the property was proper. "It seems illogical," she complained to the commission. Other neighbors who object to the two-story house on the property said the lot is flooded year round by an open artisan well that flows constantly. There is also a resident alligator, one said. William Bryant also viewed approval of Atkins' request as inconsistent. "It's just too much house for the size of the lot," he said. He recommended Atkins acquire additional land. But Architect Joe St. Cyr, representing Atkins, said there is no property for sale to increase the lot size. The house is the size Atkins requires to meet her family's needs and, "It is no shack," he added. Although the city's topographical maps indicate an elevation of less than three feet MSL on the lot, classifying it as wetlands lowlands, vegetation on the property is typical of the mid-island ridge zone, the staff reported. St. Cyr said an engineer's study showed the elevation at more than three feet. Vice Chairman Larry Simon, presiding in the absence of Chairman Ann Winterbotham, said there might be some question as to whether the plot is legal.

After confirming that Atkins' contract to purchase the lot is subject to her ability to obtain a building permit, Commissioner Lennart Lorenson moved to deny the deviation request. Commissioner Jerry Moench was the only dissenter in the 5-1 vote. He maintained that, "If the plan says the lot is buildable, the owner should have the right to build."

Schuyler steps down

After serving nine months on the city's Planning Commission Harold Schuyler is stepping down. The City Council is expected to accept his resignation at today's council meeting.

Schuyler was appointed to the commission last July to replace Al Edwards, who had resigned. His term expires Dec. 31, 1984. In a letter to the council Schuyler said he took the action with "sincere regret and great reluctance."

Dave and Mary Wooster's request for a deviation to permit a commercial shop with an apartment on the second floor on Palm Ridge Road has been continued for a second time.

The Planning Commission at the request of the applicants last week rescheduled the hearing for 9:15 a.m. on May 23.

the mailing of an explanatory letter to those community members who had not yet responded to the MSTU Petition.

Butze's actions without the consultation of his fellow commissioners created an angry and dramatic debate at Monday's monthly CEPD meeting.

A furious Ed Olling claimed Butze had exceeded his authority and added that because such a dramatic shift in funding was occurring in light of the parking change, any significant letter for mailing would have to have the perusal of the entire board of commissioners.

Peg Hofschneider agreed with Olling. "Too much goes on here that I don't know about. I don't like the approach, the secretiveness," she said Butze. "You do not keep us informed."

Butze defended himself by saying the letter fell under "the daily pursuit of CEPD's business."

"I just wanted to keep those people up to date," he said. "We knew of people who would send in the petition if they don't, we've got a problem."

At the end of the meeting Butze explained that another referendum could be the next step toward securing local Capiva funds for reimbursement. A referendum in 1981 failed by four votes.

But before any further steps will be taken regarding Capiva's share of the reimbursement, funding, the amount of federal, state and county funds for reimbursement should be more concrete.

"At some point all this will come together with the state, federal and county governments telling us what

City, builders remain at odds on construction code

By Barbara Brundage

The eighth draft of Sanibel's controversial hurricane resistant construction code ordinance is back on its drawing board. The ordinance has been under discussion since last December.

Early last month the City Council, recognizing more work was needed on the 31-page document before it would be acceptable to both the council and the Island's building contractors, directed staff to work on further revisions.

The biggest obstacle keeping the council and builders from agreement was two sections of the ordinance that would make it mandatory for contractors to use specific materials and techniques in both masonry and wood frame construction perceived necessary to withstand 139 mph winds.

"Where are the calculations that show what thickness of clip or size of nail is required to withstand these winds?" Mayor Mike Klein demanded of building officer George Blain, author of the ordinance.

"Why go from one-sixteenth inch to one-eighth, instead of something larger?" Klein asked. "Did you just eyeball it?"

The materials and standards called for in the ordinance are only minimum, City Attorney David La Croix said.

City Manager Bernie Murphy added that the materials recommended in the proposal are commonly available to Sanibel contractors.

But Councilman Fred Valtin questioned the need of being so specific in the ordinance.

Building contractors Bill Frey and John Highsmith maintained local codes such as the hurricane construction ordinance should be very specific and carefully worded as to what is permissible so both the city and the builder will be protected from lawsuits concerned that the ordinance gives building inspectors wide ranging powers in interpreting the local code.

They said their biggest problem with city planning law is interpretation that is "left to whomever has the job of interpreting at the moment."

But Frey concurred that although he is "philosophically opposed to a highly colloquial building code, the ordinance is getting closer to something we can live with."

The ordinance emphasizes that the purpose is to provide minimum standards for cost effective hurricane resistant construction of buildings on Sanibel. It specifically addresses design factors that affect structural integrity under severe storm stress and offers guidance to the design professional. Although the ordinance outlines strict specification requirements it does not preclude submission of alternate design and plans if those plans are certified by a registered professional engineer and comply with the code in respect to windloadings and possible storm.

Consultant Herbert Saifir, nationally recognized expert on hurricane resistant construction, worked with Blain on the ordinance and pointed out the above considerations will provide for use of future state of the art improvements in materials and techniques.

Murphy told the council last week that the staff should have the newest version of the ordinance ready for discussion at the May 17 council meeting.

we'll have." CEPD project manager Richard Stevens said. "What is left over we'll have to raise."

On May 12-13, a member of the Lee County Bonding Agency from Jacksonville is scheduled to visit the endangered section of Capiva's shore. The CEPD will have to convince the bonding agent that protecting the county road by reimbursement is the most cost effective way of saving the road.

The CEPD bantered around a figure of $2 to $3 million should the bonding agent be convinced.

Stevens said he still hopes Capiva can secure $1.3 million from state funds for reimbursement. This will include the $710,000 that was allocated last year but has been held in trust until Capiva submits a parking plan.

Stevens also has hopes that federal funds will remain at $1 million.

Olling again raised the prospects of a ball at Blind Pass to raise funds for a site survey that is necessary to obtain permits to construct perpendicular stabilizers.

"It could finance the whole project and the future maintenance," Olling said. Butze authorized Olling to look into the specifics, including any legal ramifications, that might affect a fall.

In other action at the CEPD meeting on Monday the board agreed on a $1,500 maximum expenditure for a site survey that is necessary to obtain permits to construct perpendicular stabilizers.

Perpendicular stabilizers are sandbag groins, four of which are being considered in the area near the present wooden groins. About $30,000 has already been set aside for this project. The permitting process could take up to four months.

Examining the creatures of surrounding seas

By George Campbell

Illustrated by Ann Winterscham

The great phylum Chordata contains the mammals we are (other dates) birds, reptiles, amphibians and fishes — all of which are true vertebrates, animals with backbones.

There are more primitive chordates too. The adults look like invertebrates, but their larval stages have a primitive backbone — a straight structure called the notochord. Many are in the seas around us.

Often called sea squirts, these interesting creatures make their living filtering planktonic food from water pumped in through an aperture in the soft hollow body and out through another after straining through the branchial basket. The body is covered with a harder cellulose tunic or test (the skin-like outer part).

Cellulose is a subject we hear a lot about these days. All the breakfast food ads talk about fiber — cellulose. Of the several carbohydrates — sugar, starches, cellulose — all are usually thought to be plant products. It seems unusual — to me at least — for animals to produce cellulose. In fact, I can't think of many other examples.

It's hard to learn to recognize tunicates. You might learn a few species and think you are a tunicate expert who can identify any that come along. But actually this isn't so easy for they are polymorphic and there are a multitude of kinds.

Tunicates come in many shapes, sizes and colors. The species pictured with this article is not minute as some are, but can be from one to four inches in size. It has a tough, leathery, spongy test. It is difficult to dissect and at first might be mistaken for a sponge. In fact, even renowned sponge experts sometimes confuse some dried tunicates with dried sponges.

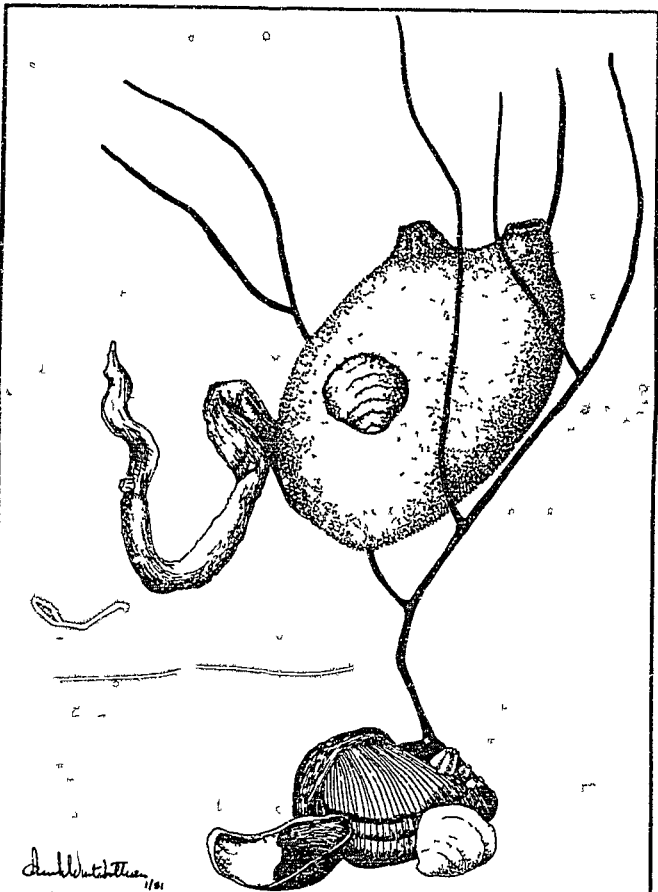

In the picture, the incurrent siphon is shown at the top, the excurrent one on the left. Waste products from digestion and reproductive products from the gonads are expelled from the adult animal in the filtered water via the excurrent siphon.

It is the larva, just as startling. It has a sort of backbone or notochord and looks rather like a tiny amphibian tadpole. They are minute and also very transparent, and many students of marine life pass their entire careers without ever seeing one although they are obviously present in immense numbers for the adults are very abundant.

A funny thing happens with these tunicates. There is an old, often repeated principle of biology that says Ontogeny recapitulates phylogeny. This is to say that in many animals (consider the human animal for example) the life history of the individual recapitulates the ancestral history of the species.

Thus the early embryo resembles something simple like an invertebrate, then a fish, then an amphibian, then a reptile before it finally Shown here is an adult sandy-skinned tunicate, Molgula occidentalis, growing on a Gorgonian or horny coral, Leptogorgia virgulata, which is common on our beach and one of the few horny corals of this region. It often grows on a ponderous ark shell, Noctia ponderosa, an example of which can be seen at the base of the picture.

Adhering to the ark shell is a common slipper shell, Crepidula fornicata. The slipper shell is one of those interesting gastropods that, like polychaetes or bivalves (which of course, it is not) is a filter feeder.

On the body of the tunicate is a single shell, Anomia simplex, a fish, translucent bivalve, the bottom shell (or valve) of which is attached to the test (or "skin") of the tunicate.

Also passing through the body of this tunicate is a dead parchment tube worm case, Chaetopterus variopedatus. The parchment worm left its tube before the whole micro-ecosystem washed ashore.

achieved mammalian characteristics.

Although many students today quarrel with this venerable concept, it cannot be denied that the mammalian embryo develops from something very simple into something very complex and in the process does, in fact, follow its backbone and spinal chord.

With the tunicates, strange to say, the opposite occurs. The larval form, bilaterally asymmetrical (or at least almost so), with its stiff notochord and lateral undulating swimming movement, resembles the vertebrate larva of the amphibian. But when it metamorphoses into the adult fixed phase, it loses that identification with the other chordates and becomes something that is more typically invertebrate in its anatomy.

When tramping our beaches, see if you can identify these interesting animals. Or, if you like, come see the magnificent example that has been pumping water in my aquarium for six months. It doesn't get much plankton, but I find it does quite well on Tetraamin fish food imported from West Germany.

The larva shows the primitive "backbone" or notochord.

Summer turtle patrols begin next week

The summer's nightly sea turtle patrols of area beaches will begin next Friday, May 13, Charles LeBuff announced last week.

LeBuff, the project director for the sea turtle conservation organization Caretta Research, Inc., started patrolling Sanibel beaches in May 1969. In 1963 he began tagging those loggerhead sea turtles that land on the island for nesting. In 1969 he formed Caretta Research, which in 1973 was incorporated as a non-profit organization.

LeBuff said the Sanibel beach from the Lighthouse to Blind Pass will be patrolled every night, weather permitting, in a Jeep that is identified with the organization's emblem, Florida Department of Natural Resources permit number, (TP-1) and a green running light.

Motor vehicles generally are prohibited from island beaches, but emergency and research vehicles are authorized to operate on the beach.

Caretta Research, Inc. moves along the beach to intercept nesting loggerhead turtles and tag turtles that are not already tagged.

The group also monitors the hatching success of nests and translocates threatened clutches of loggerhead eggs to safer sites.

Loggerheads are listed as a Threatened species under provisions of the Endangered Species Act. For more information residents and visitors should call LeBuff, 472-3177.

New refuge manager satisfied with challenge

By Scott Martell

Approaching his one month mark at the J.N. "Ding" Darling National Wildlife Refuge, new manager Ron Hight seems well satisfied that he opted for change and new challenges at the Sanibel refuge.

Previously the wildlife manager of North Carolina's Pea Island Heritage Area, Hight moved to the refuge last week.

Hight sees several similarities and many differences between Pea Island and Sanibel.

Pea Island is based near a town of 3,000 people in the fastest growing county of North Carolina. Concern about unchecked development is growing there, yet locals as yet aren't very organized about land use planning issues, he says.

"They recognize the importance of the natural environment, but they put it on the back burner," he explains, adding Sanibel offers the complete opposite position.

"There is a high degree of concern and interest for the environment and for the refuge as part of that environment here on Sanibel," Hight says.

"I am used to people being less vocal and less involved," he laughs, "but I like it this way. In some places a refuge manager is looked at as an adversary role. Here, folks seem to appreciate what we are doing."

One of the first things Hight noticed on Sanibel's was the highly active volunteer system. "Without the volunteers we'd be totally lacking," he says. "We wouldn't be able to carry out our wildlife, administrative and law enforcement duties. I really appreciate it."

"It was different on Pea Island," he says. "We had few volunteers, and they were usually already salaried personnel."

While Hight looks comfortably settled into his new job, the first month hasn't been easy. Besides seeing to the day-to-day operation of the refuge, he has spent much time diving into the background of a myriad of issues including crabs at the refuge and controlling exotic plants.

Highest on the personal level is living with his wife, Jerri, and 2-year-old daughter, Julie, who are in North Carolina where Jerri is finishing the year as a pre-school teacher.

"That hardship will be eliminated this week, however, as Hight goes to North Carolina and supervise his family's move."

Despite the busy nature of adapting to a new job, Hight is already considering the goals he would like to set for the refuge.

First he would like to be more on top of things biologically, increasing the amount of field work and investigating and monitoring wildlife at the refuge.

He would also like to explore all the opportunities in water and land management, including the use of fire as a management tool.

And thirdly, Hight feels the need for an overall plan constructing a complete picture of all aspects of the refuge. "We need to recognize what we need to do and see if the quality is there," he says.

"For instance, we need to know if we need to fix things up, like a trail," he explains, adding that he would prefer one good trail of high quality than five poor trails.

"But everything is focused, of course, on budget limitations," he adds.

And so begins a continuous struggle

Child's guide receives SCCF award for conservation efforts

A Child's Guide To Sanibel and Captiva has been awarded the Sanibel-Captiva Conservation Foundation conservation certificate in recognition of outstanding effort in conservation and environmental protection.

Written by Islander columnist Maggie Greenberg and illustrated by Nancy Olds, the 60-page guide introduces children to all manner of island wildlife and acquaints them with the need to conserve natural resources and protect plant and animal life.

A permanent Sanibel resident, Greenberg also wrote the text for the Sanibel Shell Guide. Olds owns The Island Book Nook on Palm Ridge Road.

Conservation foundation elects new chairman

After accepting Porter Goss's resignation as chairman of the Sanibel-Captiva Conservation Foundation because of his appointment to the Lee County Commission, the SCCF board of directors on April 25 elected Dr. William Webb to fill the seat.

Webb, whose experience and qualifications are of the highest order, was elected to fill the vacancy on the board at the recommendation of the nomination committee.

At the same meeting the board of directors Hese Rogers and Malcolm Beattie as co-chairmen for the remainder of the 1983 term. With their previous experience as chairman and acting chairman, Rogers and Beattie will be able to provide continuous and steady management through the rest of the year.

Sunday brings Windsurfing fleet to Sundial beach

The local windsurfing fleet will hold a series of races starting at 12:30 p.m. this Sunday, May 8, on the beach in front of the Sundial.

This is the same area where the Regional regatta will be held May 13-15. The regatta will include some of the best windsurfers in America along with 10 racers fiercely competing for a spot in the 1984 Olympics.

Sanibel Elementary School fourth and fifth graders will learn the sport in a clinic sponsored by Windsurfing of Sanibel next Monday, May 9. Other youngsters, hang loose — you'll get your chance through the free summer recreation program sponsored by the Sanibel Police Recreation Club.

Lessons are handled through Windsurfing of Sanibel. Call the store, 472-0123, to arrange a time.

Prices are $20 an hour for private lessons, $15 an hour per person for a group of two to four, and $12 an hour per person on a special family rate of four or more.

Windsurfing of Sanibel currently has eight boards available for rental and more on the way. Boards run $10 an hour, $25 for a half day, $35 for a full day and $150 a week.

to balance the administration of the refuge with early high hopes. Yet he feels budget problems can be overcome.

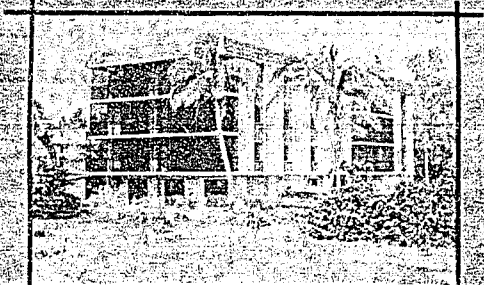

The first phase comes with careful planning and setting of a program to the Federal government and to the local community. "We need to compete for dollars," he says. "If the need is here and we develop a comprehensive plan, then we should be in a good position to compete."

Light is confident he can make realistic decisions based on the theory that, "What is best for the resource is paramount in our thoughts."

Looking to the future, Light sees the probability of continued growth around the refuge. "Hence the importance of the refuge as a sanctuary is enhanced," he says.

"And as demand for use increases, our job will be much more challenging. We may have to balance that demand for what is best for the wildlife."

Mozart comic opera combines laughter, music on Sanibel stage

The Sanibel Community Association hall will be the scene of laughter and music this Friday, May 6, when the Gulf Coast Opera Company presents The Impresario, a short comic opera by Mozart.

Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart was such a serious composer of beautiful music that not many people realize he did have his lighter moments, as proven in The Impresario.

The comic chamber opera that is approximately 40 minutes long focuses on the backstage rivalry of two divas who hate one another. The Impresario tries to induce the two combatants to draw a truce long enough to sing in the same show.

Sung in English the show is described by director Dan Turlet as being "Like I Love Lucy or Mozart with fancy music."

The production by the newly formed Gulf Coast Opera Company, Inc., features Beverly Waters, Ivy Peden and Tom Orzylczak as the Impresario.

There will be a Champagne Intermission. Tickets (for $3) are available in advance at Glad's Seafood House and at the Island Reporter and will also be available at the door the evening of the performance. Reservations can be made by calling Don Mercer, 472-1164.

Romantic comedy, American Pen Women top calendar

The Peninsula Players of Fort Myers present A Single Thing in Common, a romantic comedy by William Brown, this and next month.

The play centers on meek George Caulfield III, whose wealthy wife has thrown him out and who stumbles into a luxurious apartment shared by three divorcees. The zany remodeling of Caulfield into a modern single in New York makes for an evening of hilarious comedy.

A Single Thing in Common will be presented at 8 p.m. next Friday and Saturday, May 13 and 14, at the J. Hamilton Welch Academy in Fort Myers. Tickets are $15. Reservations should be made by calling 334-0780.

The Lee County Alliance of the Arts invites the public to the annual art show by the National League of American Pen Women at the arts center through May 25.

The Southwest Florida Branch of American Pen Women is exhibiting the works of 20 artists in this sixth annual juried show that includes a variety of media in eclectic styles.

The show is open for viewing at the Lee County Alliance of the Arts, center on the corner of McGreggor and Colonial boulevards in Fort Myers from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Whipple and Wortzel: Recent Funambulation is on exhibit at the Cape Coral Arts Studio Gallery through May 21.

Jeff Whipple teaches painting and Laura Wortzel teaches drawing at Edison Community College. Both young artists chose people as their subject matter for their current exhibit.

The Cape Coral Arts Studio Gallery is a non-profit facility of the Cape Coral Parks and Recreation Department. The gallery is open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday. Phone 542-7714 for information.

The spring schedule at the Lee County Arts Center is filled with a variety of craft courses that is sure to include something for everyone.

Jewelry-making, calligraphy, drawing on the right side of the brain, floral and interior design, quilting, music, ballet, jazz and more will be offered.

Classes have already started, but registration is still open for several of the courses. For details call: 339-2373.

THE WAY WE WERE

50 Years Ago This Week 1933

The Sanibel-Captiva Chamber of Commerce has as its new board of directors Floyd Snook, president; Lee Roy Friday, vice president; Andrew Melody, treasurer, and Marshall Taback, secretary.

Sanibel volunteer firefighters worked for two hours one night last week battling a brush fire at Bowman's Beach. Firefighter Glenn Rhodes said the fire probably was caused by "a fisherman and a cigarette butt."

The Golden Sands restaurant and cocktail lounge has been sold to a partnership of John Wright, James Zimmerman and Ray Houser.

Nine Sanibel sixth graders traveled to Cypress Lake Junior High School last week for an orientation tour of the school they will attend in the fall. Rita Addison, Susie Aron, Betty Clements, Tim Gault, Pam Holtzman, Debbie McQuade, Mark McQuade and Donald Miller made the trip.

15 Years Ago This Week 1968

Much to Scott Gale's disgust, "Uncle" Clarence Rutland pulled in the first edible fish during last week's fishing outing on the Blue Heron II out of Fort Myers Beach. Rutland's good luck continued throughout the day, and he won the jackpot with two 13-pound black groupers.

Bailey's advertised a six-pack of Ballantine beer for 89 cents and a pound of Maxwell House coffee for 59 cents.

10 Years Ago This Week 1973

The Sanibel-Captiva Conservation Foundation board of directors voted last week to award at $600 grant to Islander Paul Zajack for his continued research on the loggerhead sea turtles at Cape Romano, Fla.

Zajack, 31, is working with Caretta Research, Inc., and has already completed a five-week study of loggerheads at Cape Romano. The grant will enable him to spend eight weeks this summer making scientific observations that will be published in the Caretta year-end report.

Islanders Elinore Dormer, Dick Workman and Ann Winterbohm were interviewed recently by CBS' Charles Kuralt for the Exploring America program on conservation that will air this week.

5 Years Ago This Week 1978

The Old Sports for Youth Sports tournament ended over the weekend with the West Wind team beating Nave's Plumbing in the third play-off game. The Chevron Supreme's langled with Ken's in women's softball and ended on top with a whopping 32 runs against none for Kenny's.

During an interview with The Islander last week Porter Goss, who stepped down as the city's mayor three months ago, said he has no aspirations for a seat on the Lee County Commission. "The growth people, the condo people would murder me," Goss said.

1 Year Ago This Week 1982

The Planning Commission is not convinced that a 200-seat restaurant can be supported solely by the on-site guests at the Shell Harbor Inn resort. Because of that concern the commission last week continued the hearing on the request for the restaurant development.

Even after the post-Easter drop in tourists the J.N. "Ding" Darling National Wildlife Refuge draws more than 200 visitors a day to the new Visitor Center at the entrance to the Wildlife Drive.

LENNOX QUALITY -RELIABILITY

The Lennox HS18 will keep your home cool and comfortable this summer with its low cost operation and dependable performance.

Seasonal Energy Efficiency Ratios range up to 9.65* for energy-saving, low cost operation. The compact cabinet installs quickly, taking up less than a square yard of space.

Low cost of ownership is another reason why the HS18 is a good comfort investment. Comparisons show Lennox central cooling costs less to own and operate than almost any other when you consider purchase cost, upkeep and efficiency. All this is backed by the Lennox reputation for quality.

Lennox central air conditioning... Comfort. Economy.
Value.

Copper tubing -- a sign of quality Lennox uses copper tubing in all their condensers and heat pump coils. Some manufacturers have switched to less desirable aluminum tubing and often try to hide the fact with terms like "non-ferrous" tubing. Ask your dealer and he'll tell you copper is less brittle, more flexible, easier to work with and stands up to reactive elements in the environment better than aluminum. Copper tubing is just one more reason why Lennox quality gives you greater value.

ISLANDER SPORTS

By Scott Martell

Islanders bow to softball king and his court

Softball king Eddie Feigner gave his wife a birth day buss in front of 450 local fans last week and then presented the audience with a royal feast of laughter and amazement as The King and his Court edged past the Sanibel-Captiva team 13-2.

The game was a joke in the best sense of the word. Raise the big top and it could have been a circus with smalls of oysters and hamburgers wafting through the air and Feigner's voice barking. Folks if you are wondering why we play softball with four men, instead of two or three.

Trick pitching was only one tantalizing part of the game. Feigner pitched from second base, pitched blindfolded and did a series of throws behind his back.

The King had some advice for youngsters who might be tempted to practice his trick pitches. "I'd rather see the kids learn fast pitch," he said. "Fast pitch softball could become a big sport and take the place of some other sport. The way football is going now, people may get tired of it."

The King and his crew of Eddie Feigner Jr., Gary West and Jack Knight were in fine form. But the local team was not without its moments.

With fine pitching by John Vercoelen the Islanders shut out the Court in the first inning. In the home half of the inning, Chuck Andrews led off with a triple and scored on a double by Brian Blissett to take a 4-0 lead.

The Court's shenanigans began quickly in the second inning, however. Comedian Gary West reached second base then began a stalk of pitcher

The winning team with a six under 55 for the nine hole course included Henry McKee who blasted a hole-in-one on the 153 yard fifth hole, using a seven wood. Jim Shields, Bob Bulcock and Eddie Arthur.

Placing second with a four under 27 score was the team of Jim Minor, Dave Sutherland and June Bailey. Ed Reed, Gene Peck, John Seabrooke and Mary Mixer tied with Dick Wilhoit, Genny McKee, Francis Bailey and Jack Rogers for third place with a two under 29 score.

Rangers, 11-3

Vercoelen At the moment Vercoelen began to release his pitch, West let out a howl! The pitch is probably still on its way to Mexico.

Knight then barreled for the Court, his first of four round trippers. The Court's rally was immediately stopped, however, when third baseman Matt Apen made a stunning grab and tossed out Feigner Jr. to retire the side.

The Islanders forced the Court to put up another egg up on the scoreboard in the third inning, as a possible rally was thwarted by another third base miracle play that may be Dave Alonso.

When the Islanders came up to bat, Michael Courtney quickly pounded the ball to the outfield for a hit. The King felt it time to toast in earnest.

Some of these guys are getting a piece of the ball. Feigner yelled. Guess I'm go'ng to have to pitch faster. And he did. But there was something just a bit funny about the pitch. Let's just say it was too fast to see.

After the Court scored a run in the fourth inning the audience was treated to an inning of blindfolded pitching.

Now this is not a trick. Feigner emphasized. I'm just doing this through memory you know just like an umpire does.

He struck out two Islanders and held the team scoreless despite the blindfold. The most action in this inning came when Feigner Jr. became a raving lunatic when the umpire called one pitch a ball.

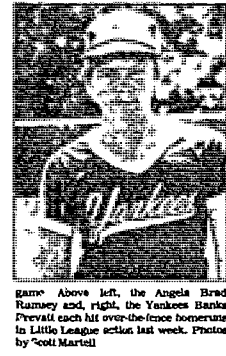

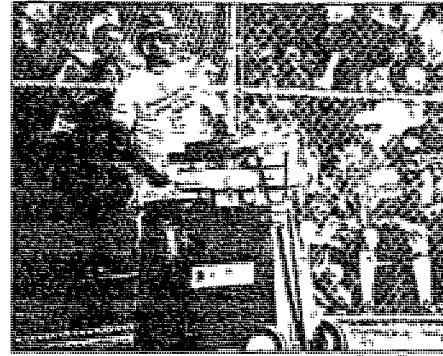

"What are you doing, he yelled. What you doing a blind man."

The fifth inning saw the game broken open as Knight wal oped two more homers, one a three run blast, and the Court went up 8-1. The Islanders tried to con back, as Jerry Muench drove home Dick Gibson for one run. But then Muench was picked off by the second base pitcher Feigner on an astonishing behind-the-back throw.

The now semi serious Court continued to score in the last inning, as Knight continued to create electricity with his bat. A double-play by Thom Traucht and Dick Muench ended the game on a positive note.

After playing golf all day at the Dunes then playing a two-hour softball game Feigner was a keel over. He got all his energy out of his game. Sometimes I just don't have all that much an obviously tired Feigner said. Last week I seemed to have all his energy to highly appreciative fans

Dick Muench, left, warms up the pitching machine that was purchased for the city's recreation complex by the Sanibel Police Recreation Club. The bulk of the funds for the $1,500 machine came from proceeds from the King and his Court.

Documentary on nuclear arms presented at Sundial May 11

The controversial Academy Award winning documentary If You Love This Planet will be shown at 7:30 p.m. at the Sundial on Wednesday, May 11.

Produced by the National Film Board of Canada, the 76-minute film addresses the issue of nuclear proliferation and features Dr. Helen Caldicott, one of the world's most articulate and active opponents of nuclear power and weaponry.

The film, which recently won an Oscar for best short documentary, was declared propaganda by the Justice Department in February in what some observers saw as both a violation of First Amendment rights and an attempt by the Reagan administration to discredit the growing public sentiment against military expenditures.

The film features a clip of then actor Ronald Reagan reacting to the dropping of the atomic bomb on Hiroshima.

The showing on Sanibel is sponsored by the Lee County Coalition for Peace. Admission is free. A discussion will follow the screening.

Christian women plan luncheon

The Sanibel-Captiva Christian Women's Club will hold its monthly luncheon at 11:30 a.m. next Thursday, May 12, at the Sundial. Cost of luncheon, $6.75.

A fashion show presented by the Lion's Paw of Sanibel will highlight the meeting.

Guest speaker will be missionary Sara King, who with her husband David is a missionary in Hong Kong. The Kings are home on furlough and will return to Hong Kong in June. David will bring special music for the luncheon.

Come and bring a friend. Reservations are necessary. If you are not contacted by May 8 please call Audrey, 481-1861, or Irva, 472-4875. Free babysitting service available by calling Marie Carso, 472-3007.

If you find you cannot attend after making reservations it is essential that you cancel by calling Audrey, 481-1861.

Library holds training sessions

New volunteers at the Sanibel Library are invited to a training session next Monday, May 9, and the following Monday, May 16. The sessions will acquaint volunteers with the library system and facilities. Meet at the library on Palm Ridge Road from 1:30 to 3 p.m.

Island Rotarians attend district assembly

Rotarians Bob Kernick, Bob Dellortia, Dick Trausch, Bill Martin, Charlie Gold and Bob Merdas attended the district assembly workshop in Fort Myers on Saturday, April 23, for an exchange of ideas with fellow Rotary Club members from the area. Every club member should plan now to attend the July 22 meeting when District Gov. Welch Whitesell and his wife Virginia, will visit the island club. A summary of the island club's plans and objectives must be submitted to Whitesell and to Rotary International by June 20. Committees are in the organization stage now and layout from members is needed and will be greatly appreciated. The club congratulates Rotarian Paul Adams, whose son Kenneth recently received his master's degree in public administration from the University of Florida at Gainesville. A special effort is being made to move the annual installation of officers dinner meeting to sometime in the month so more members will be able to attend.

NIGHTMARE LEG CRAMPS

A simple stretching exercise has worked 100% in ending habitual leg cramps and preventing their recurrence. Shows Dr. Harry Dornell of Redding, CA. With your shoes off, stand facing a wall 2 or 3 feet away. Place your hands against the wall. With your heels on the floor and your legs straight, lean forward until you feel a tense, but not painful pulling in the calf muscles. Hold the stretched position for 10 seconds. Stand up straight for 5 seconds. Then repeat the 10 second stretch. Dornell recommends the stretch 3 times a day. taper off as cramps disappear.
