beyond the obvious

Obvious. Apparent. Discernible. When we think of "obvious," we think of what is common knowledge. We take things at face value. We walk into high school thinking we know how things will go, knowing already how people will act. But then we begin to grow up and look deeper. Beyond the stereotypes and assumptions, everything can be seen from a new perspective. We have seen that the past four years were not just about going to school to learn, they were the days when we grew into adulthood. They were the days during which we matured into a richer perspective on life. They were the years during which we learned to read between the lines and look beyond the obvious.

Clockwise from the right: We learned that Bobby Kaslander is more than an athlete, he is an amazingly talented pianist; we discovered that beneath Mike Congero's tough persona lay hidden artistic abilities; we found out that Zach Trapani's hidden talent is that he is a licensed pilot.

Left: We also found out that while many students hope to someday enter the business world, Steph DeGennaro has run a successful online store for more than a year.

spend their time soaking up the sun and hanging out with friends.

behind the disguise

Double Take

Ever wonder what it would feel like to step into the shoes of a teacher? These seniors took on the roles of notable VHS faculty members and realized first hand how they handle their day at VHS. Clockwise from right: Anthony DeCandia grabs a copy of the Verona Cedar Grove Times and gives Mac some driving instruction. Paige Zebrowski gets some revenge on Hems for all those pullups in phys. ed. Alex Sniatkowski and Paul Corrente put ties on and take over for Mr. Cesa and Mr. Galbierczyk in the halls. A group of seniors steal the "secret" lunch room from Mrs. Salisbury, Mrs. McLaughlin, and Ms. Sepcie.

Did You Know...

In the last rehearsal before the Northern State Championships the band played a prank on Mr. Lynch. On the cue phrase "Make this one count" the drumline and Richie Williamson broke out into a "Ghetto Beat" and the whole band danced wildly on the field instead of marching.

What If...

The drumline didn't send it to the moon?
 Mother nature was ever on the band's side?
 Wes didn't shave his head?
 We could dance like the Orange band could?
 Color Guard didn't do Brucking Broncos?
 Alexa and Claire didn't cry when they made a speech?
 Issac didn't sing at band camp?
 Ella and Kim didn't yell at everyone?
 The Color Guard didn't get their drill changed every rehearsal?
 Richie didn't break his collarbone?
 Daisy didn't want us to "give it to her"?
 Julie wasn't a marimbeast?
 Greg didn't give inspirational speeches?
 Chrissy wasn't trapped in the cages?

Dan,

You have reached another milestone in life- High School graduation. During these last four years you challenged yourself academically and have done it successfully.

You surrounded yourself with friends, family, and peers that contributed to your success and you to theirs.

You are a person who flourishes from knowledge on how the world and everything in it works, thinks, and evolves- thus making you very interesting.

Keep evolving in your quest for knowledge, get involved, and share your achievements- you can make a difference.

It's the beginning of a new milestone- college and adulthood; our advice: make wise choices, explore and give back to the world what you take in.

Love Mama, Tato, and Danika
(The Moczulas)

Jessica,

Words cannot express how proud we are of you. You have become a very caring, responsible, and wonderful person with a great personality- someone who cares about people and the environment. You amaze us with the energy and commitment you bring to everything you do.

We wish you nothing but the best and hope you embrace all that life offers you through the next chapters of your life- your college experiences and all the wonderful journeys yet to come.

Remember that no matter what the future holds, you will always be our special daughter- we love you very much!

Love always,
Mom, Dad, and Catherine

If you go away to some silly ole college,
And fill up that big head with useless knowledge:

Who will take me for walks, play ball, kiss and hug me?
Please don't say Kelsey, you know she's too lazy!

Mom will be way too darn depressed,
She'll eat bon-bons all day, then need a big rest!

Dad will be so confused he'll rake the lawn all year;
And finally come in and drink crappy beer!

Don't think Kyle will get me out of this fog!
He'll call me a hound and say, "Snap out of it, Dog!"

Kristin's students in Hawaii have her too beat,
To fetch my dinner or throw me a treat!

And that Keara used to treat me even better than you!
Then she left me for some college, now Los Angeles too!

So now that you see how horrible everything will be.
Please stay home, eat, sleep, and be dumb like me!
